FINDINGS

- The Tom of Finland House “reflects the broad cultural, economic, or social history of the nation, state, or community” for its association with queer art in Los Angeles.
- The Tom of Finland House “is identified with historic personages or with important events in the main currents of national, state, or local history” as it was the Los Angeles-based home of the internationally-renowned artist, Tom of Finland.

CRITERIA

The criterion is the Cultural Heritage Ordinance which defines a historical or cultural monument as any site (including significant trees or other plant life located thereon) building or structure of particular historic or cultural significance to the City of Los Angeles, such as historic structures or sites in which the broad cultural, economic, or social history of the nation, State or community is reflected or exemplified, or which are identified with historic personages or with important events in the main currents of national, State or local history or which embody the distinguishing characteristics of an architectural type specimen, inherently valuable for a study of a period style or method of construction, or a notable work of a master builder, designer or architect whose individual genius influenced his age.

SUMMARY

The Tom of Finland House, built in 1911, is located at 1419-1421 Laveta Terrace in Echo Park, north of Sunset Boulevard, between Echo Park Avenue and Portia Street. The seventeen-room, single-family residence was constructed by contractor W.J. Gretten in the Craftsman style; there is no licensed architect recorded on the building permit. The home was occupied by a series of families until 1979 when the property was purchased by its current owner, Durk Dehner. It was into this household in 1980 that Dehner – a fan of the work of Tom of Finland – would invite the artist to reside. Tom of Finland was an internationally-renowned artist celebrated for his stylized homoerotic drawings and his influence on late twentieth century gay culture. Tom of Finland’s work has only grown in popularity since his death, making him one of the most recognizable gay erotic artists of the twentieth century.

Tom of Finland was born as Touko Laaksonen in Kaarina, Finland on May 8, 1920. From early adolescence, Laaksonen showed significant artistic talent, rendering homoerotic, lifelike drawings of the masculine figures – loggers, lumberjacks, farmhands – that worked the rural landscape of his youth. Upon graduating from high school in 1939, Laaksonen was directed toward a more vocationally-oriented path than fine art and began studying commercial advertising. However, his education was interrupted in 1940 by the outbreak of World War II when he was conscripted into the Finnish army. After the war, Laaksonen moved to Helsinki, revived his artistic career and became a freelance illustrator. In 1956, Laaksonen submitted his artwork to the Los Angeles-based magazine, Physique Pictorial, the first all-nude, all-male publication in the United States. To preserve his anonymity Laaksonen signed his submitted art as “Tom.” Bob Mizer, publisher of Physique Pictorial, enthusiastically accepted the work for publication and appended “of Finland” to “Tom,” in the style adopted by other erotic artists of the period. Tom’s drawing, featured on the cover of the spring 1957 issue, received an immediate positive response and began his 20-year period as a leading contributor to the magazine. Tom first visited Los Angeles in 1978 to display his work in solo exhibitions and two years later, Tom returned to Los Angeles more permanently, living with Durk Dehner at his home. Dehner became Tom's friend, partner, agent, and occasional model; their collaborative partnership lasted until Tom's death in 1991.

Noteworthy in itself as a Craftsman-style residence, the property at 1421 Laveta Terrace was where Tom lived and worked for the last decade of his life. During this productive period, a third floor space in the house served as Tom's combined bedroom and studio. Though Tom would spend his summers in Finland – visa restrictions required that Tom return to his native country every six months – the house served as the strongest focal point for his work and legacy. Tom's presence at the house helped to christen it "TOM House" in the gay and artistic community. The decade that Tom spent at TOM House was a standout period in his career; works produced at the home during this time were pivotal in turning him into an artist of international acclaim. Throughout the years, Tom's work was collected by major art institutions, including the New York Museum of Modern Art and Los Angeles' own Museum of Contemporary Art; his work came to be admired, too, by several notable individuals including Andy Warhol, Robert Mapplethorpe, and John Waters.

In 1984, Tom and Dehner co-founded the Tom of Finland Foundation at the home to preserve Tom's work as well as to promote a space in which to invite other gay artists and luminaries to be residents and guests. The home lent itself to discourses on art, gay liberation, and pride. To this day, the home houses invaluable artistic material, classes, events and other cultural activities telling of Tom's legacy, helping to cultivate the next generation of gay erotic art and culture in Los Angeles and the wider community.

The primary building on the Laveta Terrace lots is a three-story Craftsman home that is rectangular in plan and clad in composition shingles. The front entrance features an oak door with decorative rectangular carvings and is flanked by vertical side lights containing beveled glass. The ground floor of the primary elevation exhibits a slightly raised masonry and concrete porch consisting of a side-gabled wood overhang with exposed rafters and rough-textured masonry block pillar supports. The second floor of the main elevation has a centered projecting bay directly over the porch overhang with small double-hung windows. The fully-exposed side bay slightly projects and is supported by three rafters with decoratively carved tails. The third floor features a steeply-hipped front-facing gable with decorative stained glass and a flat-roofed dormer with exposed eaves. The interior spaces of the home retain most of the building's early twentieth century Craftsman-style plan and layout, along with extensive decorative features. Coffered ceilings, Art Nouveau-style light fixtures, varnished wood trim and siding, cabinetry, wood floors, and pocket doors are located throughout the space. Nearly all of the alterations to the home were made prior to the proposed period of significance, 1980 – 1990, corresponding to Tom of Finland's direct association with the property during his lifetime. Changes made during the 1980s include the addition of stained glass windows to the third floor in 1989 and the raising of the third-floor dormer roof to allow for larger window openings. Also, various multimedia artworks have been incorporated into the walls and finishes of the building's interior.

In addition to the three-story house, also on the property is a front-facing gabled garage with exposed rafters, triangular brackets, horizontal wood siding, and decorative features identical to the primary structure. Furthermore, there are multimedia art pieces located throughout the grounds.

The citywide historic resources survey, SurveyLA, identified the Tom of Finland House as individually eligible for local listing or designation as well as a notable resource associated with Queer Art within the City's LGBT Historic Context Statement.

DISCUSSION

The Tom of Finland House successfully meets two of the Historic-Cultural Monument criteria.

The property “reflects the broad cultural, economic, or social history of the nation, state, or community” for its association with queer art in Los Angeles. LGBT persons have found success in all aspects of the Los Angeles art scene. However, they were not always able to express their sexuality or identity in their work. In the post-World War II era that so valued “sameness,” it was difficult, even risky, to express same-sex attraction. Los Angeles emerged as an important center for modern art in the United States during the 1960s and 1970s when LGBT artists were becoming more visible within the art community. During this period, artistic expressions of homosexuality became more acceptable, but were not without controversy. As a regular contributor to Physique Pictorial that reached gay male audiences both across the United States and Europe, the artist known as Tom of Finland established himself as a pioneer in gay erotic art and significantly influenced the formation of gay male identity and self-image.

The Tom of Finland House “is identified with historic personages or with important events in the main currents of national, state, or local history” as the Los Angeles-based home of the internationally-renowned artist, Tom of Finland, from 1980 until his death in 1991. During this decade, Tom’s creative development, along with an increasing number of exhibitions, private commissions, and other sales, were pivotal in turning him into an artist of international renown. His work came to be admired by notable individuals such as Andy Warhol and Robert Mapplethorpe, and collected by major art institutions, including New York’s Museum of Modern Art and Los Angeles’ own Museum of Contemporary Art. Of the 3,862 pieces of art that Tom created during his career, it is estimated that approximately 800 works were completed while he resided at the Tom of Finland House.

The 1419-1421 Laveta Terrace property continues to maintain direct association with Tom via the Tom of Finland Foundation that he co-founded to catalog his own work as well as to provide a “safe haven” for similar artwork. Operating from the subject property today, the foundation seeks to protect erotic art from discrimination by presenting it within the appropriate context, so it can be appreciated and acknowledged free from the opposition that its subject matter might cause.

CALIFORNIA ENVIRONMENTAL QUALITY ACT (“CEQA”) FINDINGS

State of California CEQA Guidelines, Article 19, Section 15308, Class 8 “consists of actions taken by regulatory agencies, as authorized by state or local ordinance, to assure the maintenance, restoration, enhancement, or protection of the environment where the regulatory process involves procedures for protection of the environment.”

State of California CEQA Guidelines Article 19, Section 15331, Class 31 “consists of projects limited to maintenance, repair, stabilization, rehabilitation, restoration, preservation, conservation or reconstruction of historical resources in a manner consistent with the Secretary of the Interior’s Standards for the Treatment of Historic Properties with Guidelines for Preserving, Rehabilitating, Restoring, and Reconstructing Historic buildings.”

The designation of the Tom of Finland House as an Historic-Cultural Monument in accordance with Chapter 9, Article 1, of The City of Los Angeles Administrative Code (“LAAC”) will ensure that future construction activities involving the subject property are regulated in accordance with Section 22.171.14 of the LAAC. The purpose of the designation is to prevent significant impacts to a Historic-Cultural Monument through the application of the standards set forth in the LAAC. Without the regulation imposed by way of the pending designation, the historic significance and integrity of the subject property could be lost through incompatible alterations and new construction and the demolition of an irreplaceable historic site/open space. The Secretary of the Interior's Standards for Rehabilitation are expressly incorporated into the LAAC and provide standards concerning the historically appropriate construction activities which will ensure the continued preservation of the subject property.

The use of Categorical Exemption Class 8 in connection with the proposed designation is consistent with the goals of maintaining, restoring, enhancing, and protecting the environment through the imposition of regulations designed to prevent the degradation of Historic-Cultural Monuments.

The use of Categorical Exemption Class 31 in connection with the proposed designation is consistent with the goals relating to the preservation, rehabilitation, restoration and reconstruction of historic buildings and sites in a manner consistent with the Secretary of the Interior's Standards for the Treatment of Historic Properties.

Categorical Exemption ENV-2016-2511-CE was prepared on August 26, 2016.

BACKGROUND

On August 4, 2016 the Cultural Heritage Commission voted to take the property under consideration. On August 25, a subcommittee of the Commission consisting of Commissioners Milofsky and Irvine visited the property, accompanied by staff members from the Office of Historic Resources.

FINDINGS

Based on the facts set forth in the summary and application, the Commission determines that the application is complete and that the property may be significant enough to warrant further investigation as a potential Historic-Cultural Monument.

A. Proposed Monument Description

TOM House (“Tom of Finland House”)

Primary elevation of TOM House. Source: Wallpaper Magazine (2014)

Primary Building Exterior

Set on a sloping lot and located on a residential street in the Echo Park area, the subject building is a three-floor residential building constructed in 1911 and designed in the Craftsman style. The building is located on Lots 21 and 22 of the Sunset Blvd Heights Tract at 1421 Laveta Terrace.

The rectangular plan building is cross-gabled with a projecting dormer window at roof level. The roof is covered in composition shingles. Three building floors are above ground, with a basement located below the back portion of the building.

The ground floor of the primary elevation exhibits a slightly raised masonry and concrete porch bisecting two-thirds of the facade. Rough textured masonry block pillars and side walls support a porch consisting of a side-gabled wood overhang with exposed rafters. The elevated porch is accessed by three steps from the ground with flooring covered in tile. The centered entrance in the porch exhibits an oak door with decorative rectangular carvings surrounding a glass opening. This door is flanked by vertical side lights containing beveled glass. The window located within the porch is a large single-pane window. The fully exposed side bay also has a large single-pane window immediately below a horizontal band that traverses the entire length of the main elevation.

The second floor of the main elevation has a centered projecting bay directly over the porch overhang, with small double-hung windows. Flanking this center bay are pairs of double-hung windows. The fully-exposed side bay is slightly projecting and supported by three rafters with decoratively carved ends. The third floor contains a steeply-hipped front-facing gable with wooden fascia boards and supporting brackets. At the apex of the gable are paired single-pane windows with decorative stained glass. The third floor's western portion has a flat-roofed dormer with exposed eaves, brackets, and two pairs of single-pane windows.

The exterior of the entire building consists of continuous horizontal wood boards that traverse the main and side elevations. The side elevations of the subject building have double-hung windows, rows of single-pane windows, continuous horizontal wood siding, and a plaster and brick chimney on the western elevation.

Primary Building Interior

The subject building contains a total of seventeen rooms. The ground-floor interior spaces of the subject building retain most of the building's early 20th century Craftsman-style plan and layout, along with extensive original decorative features. Coffered ceilings, Art-Nouveau-style light fixtures, varnished wood trim and siding, cabinetry, and wood floors are located throughout the interior. The living room exhibits its original fireplace along with original pocket doors. The dining room contains extensive cabinetry and the original built-in buffet with a prominent stained glass window. The second-floor spaces of the subject building, including the bathroom, also exhibit most of the building's original layout and features.

Secondary Buildings

The side driveway area of the subject property contains a temporary utilitarian storage unit. Behind the storage unit is a front-facing gabled garage structure exhibiting exposed rafters, triangular brackets, and horizontal wood siding. All decorative features of the garage structure are identical to the subject building and it appears to have been constructed concurrently with the primary building.

Attached to the side elevation of the garage structure is a wooden patio structure immediately after the steps leading from the kitchen area of the main building. The utilitarian structure is a wooden A-frame-style structure with exposed beams and rafters, wooden latticework, and a concrete cinder block base. One end of this patio area has a brick trash burner that has been converted into a barbeque.

Landscape Features

The downward sloping back portion of the subject property contains three additional levels of terracing supported by low cinder block garden walls and accessed by a concrete staircase with metal and wooden hand rails. This garden area is a dense mix of mature trees, shrubs, vines, and plants. This includes Mexican Fan Palm trees, rubber trees, citrus trees, avocado trees, fig trees, bamboo, banana plants, bougainvillea, loquat, ferns, jasmine, grapes, and roses. Hardscape features of this landscaped area include brick pavers, pebble rocks, fountains, seating areas, signage, and bric-a-brac. Multimedia art pieces are located throughout the grounds.

The street level portion of the subject property is screened by tall and dense shrubbery punctuated by wooden gates. The front yard contains landscaped shrubs, various plants, and two mature trees: a pepper tree and a rubber tree. Flooring is a combination of turf, concrete, brick pavers, tiles, and pebble rocks.

Alterations

Since the subject building's construction in 1911, the following alterations have occurred to the building and grounds. Note that most alterations occurred prior to or during the proposed period of significance of 1980-1990, some are ongoing.

1. The attached patio structure to the garage in the back area appears to have been added sometime between the 1940s-1950s. This patio was fully permitted and legalized by the City of Los Angeles in 1974.
2. A small second-floor porch centrally located over the ground-floor porch was enclosed sometime in the 1970s. The previous owner appears to have reused the same double-hung windows in extending the wall forward a few feet. The space is now used as a bedroom.
3. An interior kitchen wall was removed to enlarge the space.
4. The side brick chimney collapsed in the 1987 Whittier earthquake and was reconstructed with a stucco finish rather than with the original masonry block facing.
5. In the 1980s, the roof of the third-floor dormer was raised several feet to allow for larger window openings. The current owner reincorporated the same roofing material, rafters, and brackets. (Note: The adjacent space was used as a studio by subject artist Tom of Finland.)
6. Stained glass windows on the third floor were added in 1989.

7. Landscaped areas have had additions of seating areas, signage, retaining garden walls, paving, and hand rails.
8. Various multimedia artworks have been incorporated into the walls and finishes of the subject building interior.

Community History and Building History Prior to Period of Significance (1911-1979)

The subject building was built as part of the early 20th century wave of development in the Echo Park area of Los Angeles. With the laying out of Sunset Boulevard in 1886, residential construction in the Echo Park area began with real estate developer Thomas Kelley purchasing 40 acres to develop the “Montana Tract” in 1887.

The Laveta Terrace location of the subject property was subdivided by Alex Culver as “Sunset Boulevard Heights”. Culver began advertising Sunset Boulevard Heights in 1905 with newspaper advertisements proclaiming “On a Beautiful Knoll, 5 Minutes by the [Street] Car.” A still-extant public stairway was constructed from Sunset Boulevard to Laveta Terrace to spur development.

At some point during the tract development, the residential street’s distinctive 80-90-foot-tall Mexican Fan Palm trees were planted. The height of the palms combined with the hilltop location of Laveta Terrace make the palms visible from long distances and serve as a visual landmark for the immediate neighborhood.

Based on Sanborn Maps, the subject building appears to be one of the first residential buildings constructed in the development. Anecdotal evidence suggests that the building was the first residence constructed on Laveta Terrace, but permit research and adjacent building construction information is unable to fully support this assertion.

Building permits establish that the single-family residence was constructed in 1911 by contractor W.J. Gretten for owner R.W. Kemp at a cost of $4,500 dollars. There is no licensed architect listed in the building permit.

The home was occupied by a series of families, two of whom appear to be of Italian-American descent. In 1929 the property was owned by Antonio Lozzi. In the early 1970s, the residence was owned by Gelindo Marrone.

In 1979, the residence was purchased from Michael and Katherine A. Bishop by current owner Durk Dehner. Tom of Finland’s residency in the subject property a year later in 1980 establishes the period of significance.

This space contains his bed, desk, clothes, carpeting, lamps, and other personal items. The policy of the organization is to conserve and maintain these items in this space to the greatest extent possible.

Art Installations

Throughout the interior and exterior of the subject building, multimedia art installations have been added and incorporated into the building by various artists beginning in the 2000s. While the majority of the works exhibited in the residence are detachable and movable by nature (framed paintings, drawings, posters, sculpture, etc.), some works have been incorporated into the physical fabric of building. Artworks are located on plaster ceilings, doorways, and cabinetry.

Rather than being classified as detrimental alterations after the building's period of significance, these works are in keeping with both the Tom of Finland Foundation's mission to nurture artists, and the artistic aesthetic of Tom of Finland. These works do not detract from the setting and feeling of the interior of the building. The addition of these works are evolving and carefully curated, and they are reviewed by arts professionals to be compatible with the setting of Tom of Finland House. These built-in works enhancing the residence are by highly-regarded artists such as Ross Johnston, Miguel Angel Reyes, Hector Silva, Minoru Terada, and The Haas Brothers.

B. Statement of Significance

TOM House (“Tom of Finland House”)

TOM House is the property in which the internationally-renowned artist known as “Tom of Finland” (Touko Laaksonen) spent the last decade of his productive life, and it is the residence most associated with the artist’s life and work. The property continues to serve as the base of the Tom of Finland Foundation (ToFF), co-founded by Tom himself, and it houses the largest repository of the artist’s work in the world.

Based on the Cultural Heritage Ordinance criteria for the City of Los Angeles, this property meets two criteria for designation as a Historic-Cultural Monument:

- the property is identified with a historic personage;
- the property reflects the broad cultural, economic or social history of the nation, state, or community

The proposed period of significance for the property is 1980-1990, corresponding to Tom’s direct association with the property during his lifetime.

This statement is divided into 6 parts: a biographical overview of Tom of Finland as a historic personage; a discussion of TOM House and Tom’s time at the house, a timeline summarizing key events; an examination of the cultural significance of Tom and his art; recognition by the nation of Finland; a conclusion.

1. Tom of Finland: Historic Personage¹

Tom of Finland is still today the most recognizable of all gay erotic artists.

F. Valentine Hooven III, biographer for Tom of Finland²

Touko Laaksonen: Early Years

The artist who would become known as “Tom of Finland” was born as Touko Laaksonen on May 8, 1920, in Kaarina, Finland. In the 1920s, Kaarina was a rural town filled with farmland and woods. Already showing precocious artistic talent from childhood, the adolescent Touko began privately creating homoerotic drawings of masculine figures such as the loggers, lumberjacks and farmhands that populated this rural area.

Upon graduating from high school in 1939, Touko was directed towards a more vocationally-oriented path than fine art, and he began studying advertising. This education was interrupted by World War II and Russia’s invasion of Finland. Touko was conscripted into the Finnish army in 1940. His years of military service exposed him to wartime violence that weighed on him for much of his life. With limited access to privacy, he also did no erotic drawing during his four and a half years of service. During this period, however, he began to have sex with uniformed men, adding additional masculine archetypes – particularly uniformed soldiers and sailors – to his sexual fantasies.

After the war, Touko moved to Helsinki and resumed his private erotic drawing. He graduated from his studies in advertising in 1946 and became a freelance illustrator. In 1953, he met Veli Mäkinen, the man who would be his partner for the next 28 years.³

Tom of Finland: Career Breakthrough

In 1956, Touko – at the encouragement of a friend – submitted his artwork to Physique Pictorial, a leading US “beefcake magazine” based in Los Angeles that featured depictions of young, athletic men. Touko signed his submitted art as “Tom” to preserve his anonymity. Bob Mizer, publisher of Physique Pictorial, enthusiastically accepted the work for publication. Mizer also appended “of Finland” to “Tom”, in the style adopted by other erotic artists of the period, such as the photographers Bruce of Los Angeles and Spartan of Hollywood.⁴

Touko’s drawing – featuring a smiling lumberjack – was featured on the cover of the spring 1957 issue. The response to the artwork was “immediate, electrifying, and international”.⁵ Touko “became” Tom of Finland, and Tom began a 20-year period as a leading contributor to the magazine. Significantly, Physique Pictorial was published out of Los Angeles and thus Tom was connected to the city relatively early in his career.

First Tom of Finland Drawing with Physique Pictorial (1957)

This career breakthrough propelled Tom’s progression to becoming a producer of homoerotic images that would eventually become globally recognizable. In his distinctive drawings, Tom took hyper-masculine archetypes that had been reserved for the heterosexual imagination (e.g. lumberjacks, bikers, sailors, cowboys and policemen), and he re-cast them in his own homoerotic drawings. These unabashed re-imaginings of men who enjoyed having sex with each other were unique for their time.

As the demand for Tom’s work grew, Tom began taking on private commissions of his artwork. However, in the 1950s, neither erotic art nor homosexual art paid well. In 1958, Tom became a permanent commercial artist at advertising agency McCann Erickson, and it was not until 1973 that he was able to leave and work full-time on his own creative practice. That same year, Tom had his first exhibition of his artwork, which took place in Hamburg, Germany. However, all but one of the exhibited works were stolen. It was to be five years before Tom exhibited his artwork again – this time, in the city that he would come to be identified with for the remainder of his life: Los Angeles.

⁵ Valentine Hooven (2012), p. 107. As Valentine Hooven has noted elsewhere, by the end of its second year, Physique Pictorial already had nationwide distribution in the USA and was also selling in numerous major cities in Europe (Valentine Hooven, 1995, p. 46).

Tom in Los Angeles and at 1421 Laveta Terrace

In February 1978, Tom arrived in Los Angeles for a 21-day U.S. visit. He stayed with Durk Dehner, a gay man who was then 28 years old. Two years earlier, Durk had seen an image of Tom's art in an advertisement at a gay bar in New York. Struck by the image, he had written Tom a fan letter and they had begun a correspondence.

During Tom's first stay in Los Angeles, his work was shown in solo exhibitions, both in Los Angeles and San Francisco. Durk also began booking Tom into more galleries, beginning a collaboration that saw Durk become Tom's partner, friend and occasional model. This historic and fruitful collaboration would continue until the end of Tom's life.

In 1979, Durk bought a property at 1421 Laveta Terrace, Los Angeles, along with three other gay men. It was into this household that Durk invited Tom, and in 1980, Tom began to stay at the house, which eventually came to be known as "TOM House".

Thus began the direct association of 1421 Laveta Terrace with Tom of Finland. Due to visa restrictions, Tom returned to Finland every six months, but TOM House remained his primary residence and work premises until virtually the end of his life. In 1984, Tom and Durk together co-founded ToFF with the aim of preserving and promoting Tom's work. ToFF operated from TOM House, as it still does today. Eventually, Durk's housemates left the household and Durk became the sole owner of the property. Other people, including gay artists, joined Tom and Durk as residents and guests of the house, continuing a communal life that is retained at TOM House today.

The decade that Tom spent at TOM House was a standout period in his career. Tom's creative development and prolific output at the house, along with an increasing number of exhibitions, private commissions and other sales, were pivotal in turning him into an artist of international renown. His work came to be admired by notable individuals (e.g. artists Andy Warhol⁶ and Robert Mapplethorpe)⁷ and collected by major art institutions, including New York's Museum of Modern Art (MoMA) and Los Angeles' own Museum of Contemporary Art (MOCA).

It was only due to declining health that Tom returned to Helsinki in 1989. The following year, a documentary on his life, Daddy and the Muscle Academy, had an international theatrical release. That same year, the first edition of his biography, Tom of Finland: His Life and Times,⁸ was released and translated into multiple languages. His work was also accepted into the Whitney Museum's 1991 Biennial, alongside art by renowned artists such as Roy Lichtenstein, Jasper Johns and Cindy Sherman.⁹

⁷ Mapplethorpe was a known admirer and collector of Tom of Finland art (see, for example, Ramakers, 1988, p. 12 and Valentine Hooven, 1993, p. 181). Mapplethorpe had intended to write the introduction for Tom's Retrospective volume of works, but his declining health intervened (Niemi, 2006, p. 66).

⁸ Valentine Hooven (1993).

⁹ Rus (2016), p. 20.

At age 71, Tom died of an emphysema-induced stroke on November 7, 1991. His work had accrued international acclaim – a level of recognition that would only increase in the years to follow. After his death, most of his remaining possessions in Finland were shipped to TOM House,¹⁰ the site that is the strongest focal point for Tom’s work, influence and legacy.

*(TOM House) really is the center of... what was (Tom) and what is him.*¹¹
Durk Dehner, President, ToFF

Noteworthy in itself as a Craftsman-style residence, TOM House was the site where Tom lived and worked for the last decade of his life. During this productive period, a third-floor space in TOM House served as Tom’s combined bedroom and studio. For much of this decade, Tom spent his winters at TOM House in Los Angeles and his summers in Finland.¹²

¹⁰ Dehner (2009a). The transcript for this interview is available upon request.

¹¹ Dehner (2009a).

¹² Mustola (2006), p. 52.

While staying at the house, Tom would draw almost every day. As Durk Dehner recalled in a 2009 interview:

(He) would actually just shut the door and he would draw... he would draw a lot here. So he was really obsessed with drawing... The only time I ever knew where he didn't pick up his pencil was when we took him on a trip to Hawaii.¹³

ToFF has documented and catalogued 3,862 pieces of Tom's work (2,338 of these being finished pieces and 1524 being preparatory studies). Approximately 1,500 of these works are held on-site at TOM House as part of ToFF's permanent collection, which is the largest collection of Tom's work in the world.¹⁴ ToFF estimates that, of Tom's total documented and catalogued body of work, approximately 800 pieces (around 20%) were created at TOM House.

TOM House is also home to vast amounts of Tom-related ephemera, including personal items belonging to Tom, such as clothing, correspondence and personal photographs; Tom's scrapbooks, which contained clippings of scenes and individuals that informed his art; and paraphernalia that features or references Tom's art – from bar coasters to action figures to matchbooks to a Christmas tree ornament. With most of Tom's personal possessions shipped from Finland to TOM House after his death and merged with what was already at the house,¹⁵ and due to ToFF's ongoing work to preserve Tom's legacy, TOM House holds the world's largest collection of Tom-related ephemera.

Open to the public by appointment, TOM House typically has around 150 artworks on exhibit for visitors to view, with an emphasis on Tom's art and works that contain allusions to Tom's art. A dedicated library houses books on Tom's life and work, along with other relevant publications, such as books on erotic art and queer art. Over ToFF's 32-year history, scholars at many levels and hundreds of artists have used ToFF's collection and library for research.

TOM House also continues to host a range of events that have maintained the public visibility of the property itself and its identification with the personage of Tom of Finland. These events include an art fair, gay and leather¹⁶ community events, and art classes.

¹³ Dehner (2009a).

¹⁴ ToFF also collects erotic works by other artists. In the 1980s, artists living with HIV/AIDS made pleas to ToFF to protect their work posthumously – to ensure that these works did not, as Durk Dehner put it, “fall into just nothingness” (Dehner, 2009a). Although ToFF had previously focused solely on Tom's work, Tom and Durk subsequently expanded its scope to include the preservation and promotion of erotic works by other artists. To date, ToFF holds over 2000 original artworks by artists other than Tom. ToFF's full archive – with over 100,000 images, documents and pieces of memorabilia – is in fact the world's largest repository of erotic art.

¹⁵ Dehner (2009a).

¹⁶ In an adaptation of Johnson's (2004) definition, “leather” is used here as “a blanket term for a large array of sexual preferences, identities, relationship structures, and social organizations loosely” connected to various sexual expressions and practices, including BDSM. Participants may wear leather

The fact that TOM House still has use as a residence – and one in which Durk Dehner still lives – is also worth noting, as it continues the communal and social life of the house that Tom himself experienced. TOM House is rarely empty of people and, over the 25 years that have passed since Tom’s death, it still hosts artists from around the world who make erotic art.

Today, the house continues to accrue distinction for its historical and cultural status, owing to its association with Tom. Most recently, this has resulted in the March 2016 release, by esteemed art book publisher Rizzoli, of the 255-page book TOM House: Tom of Finland in Los Angeles.¹⁷

Tom of Finland at TOM House: Period of Significance (1980-1990)

As the site most identified with Tom and his work, TOM House is a physical reflection of and a testament to Tom’s artistic, cultural and historical influence.

During his decade at TOM House, Tom filled his days with an abundance of creative activity and stimulation.¹⁸ As reflected in these excerpts from a 2009 interview with Durk Dehner, this period was personally and artistically energizing for Tom:

(H)e loved Los Angeles and he was always happy to just be here. You know I met him when he was 59 or 58... And actually, he (later) thanked me... because he said (being hosted at TOM House, taken to events and introduced to new people) kept him young for that 10 years... his friends of the same age were retiring in Finland and he was out just meeting new people all the time, new guys, and it really stimulated his artwork...

(P)eople would always be coming here. There were 3 or 4 of us living here besides Tom and so there was always activity, there’d be dinners, there’d be new people, and so he found a lot of his models just by being here and them walking through the door as friends and he seemed to really like that...¹⁹

In the space available in this statement, it is difficult to do justice to the significance of the work that Tom produced at TOM House. This echoes sentiments expressed by Durk Dehner in his 2009 interview:

(T)he decade in LA was remarkable because we’re now just realizing how important it was by looking at the hundreds of sketches that he did during the garments, although the wearing of leather does not necessarily involve leather fetishization. As Johnson notes, many of the sexual styles associated with leather subcultures “have a considerable history and are arguably found in many societies” (p. 1).

¹⁷ Reynolds (2016). Also of significance is a 2014 article on TOM House in international design publication Wallpaper Magazine*, written by Richard Meyer of Stanford University (see Meyer, 2014).

¹⁸ For example, as part of his morning routine, Tom would have breakfast and then “he would go (into his room) and draw and draw for 4 hours” (Dehner, 2009a).

¹⁹ Dehner (2009a).

last 4 or 5 years (of this period)... they had stories and they told so much about Tom...²⁰

Nonetheless, the remainder of this section singles out some important aspects of the work that Tom produced at TOM House, beginning with the broadened racial representations in Tom's work, as informed by his residence in Los Angeles and at the property. For the first forty years of his career, Tom's art was largely populated by depictions of white men.²¹ However, while at TOM House, Tom was exposed to the ethnic diversity of Los Angeles. In particular, he was exposed to men of ethnic backgrounds whom he had had little exposure to in Finland, especially African-American men.²²

As a result, by 1986 – roughly mid-way through his decade of staying at TOM House – men of African background were regularly appearing in Tom's work.²³ These men were frequently shown in interracial encounters, which also broke social prohibitions concerning (gay male) interracial sexuality at the time.²⁴ By the end of the 1980s, Tom had produced enough finished pieces to enable the publication of a book specifically devoted to his works that featured African-American men.²⁵ That a concept and a market for such a book had been imagined speaks to important cultural shifts, both within US race politics and US gay male culture. In the years since Tom's death, some of these drawings have circulated internationally, particularly via exhibitions and the continued publication of Tom's work in art books by publisher Taschen.

The racial dynamics in Tom's work were always present²⁶ and nuanced, and these nuances were deepened through Tom's experiences of living at TOM House. Various commentators have discussed Tom's representations of black men in his work.²⁷ It has also been observed that some ethnic groups remained largely, if not completely, absent from Tom's art.²⁸ At the same time, it is less noted, although notable, that during the 1980s Tom's work came to include depictions of men who appeared to be of mixed race.²⁹ During his stays at TOM House, Tom produced hundreds of works that engaged with the racial dynamics of the time.

The impact of the AIDS epidemic was also reflected in the work that Tom produced at TOM House during the 1980s. In interviews, Tom typically distanced himself from any suggestions that he had overt political intentions as an artist,³⁰ but the AIDS epidemic clearly galvanized his art practice. Durk Dehner recalled in a 2009 interview:

(Tom) tried his best to actually do what he could to encourage fellas to protect themselves. And so for the rest of his life, for those 7 years he was doing drawings oftentimes with condoms in them or with little (safer sex) references. We did a lot of campaigning. We would send safe sex posters (featuring donated Tom of Finland images)³¹ out to bars all over the world.³²

Tom himself died not from AIDS but from an emphysema-induced stroke, owing to years of cigarette smoking. The effects of Tom's own ageing and illness also came to be reflected in the work he produced at TOM House. He began to depict older men, some with receding hairlines and grey hair, allowing the men in his art to age with him – in this sense, too, Tom literally produced his most mature work at TOM House. When his emphysema medication caused his hands to shake, he abandoned the meticulous pencil-work of his finished drawings and began creating pastel works, while continuing his sketching.³³ Some of these pastel works remain on display at TOM House.

4. Cultural Significance of Tom of Finland and his Art

(A)n artist superb, but... an influence transcendent. What (Tom of Finland) did was open the doorway, the path for so many to follow by not being afraid of homoerotic subject matter and also the way it was treated.

Harvey Shipley-Miller, Trustee, Judith Rothschild Foundation³⁵

Far from the days when it circulated exclusively among “a small group of insiders”, Tom’s work has “(become) a collectible cultural article”.³⁶ His works now hang in esteemed art institutions around the world. Images of “his men” also circulate in the realm of the everyday, appearing on items such as homewares, clothing, and even a stamp series produced by the Finnish postal service.³⁷ All the while, reproductions or derivations of his work are still to be found on the walls of today’s gay bars. Savored as a pornographer, lauded by critics and artists such as Camille Paglia and John Waters,³⁸ and acknowledged as both changing “the way gay men thought about themselves” and “the way in which non-gay people thought about male homosexuals”,³⁹ the wide circulation and appreciation for Tom’s work is unique.

This section singles out some standout areas concerning the cultural significance of Tom’s work. The discussion begins with Tom’s impact on the formation of gay male identity and self-image.

As already noted, from 1957-1976, the main outlet for disseminating Tom’s art was Physique Pictorial.⁴⁰ Based in Los Angeles, this leading beefcake magazine has since been credited as the first mass-produced magazine that directly and solely focused on the male physique for its beauty.⁴¹

The 1940s and 1950s preceded not only the legalization of gay pornography in the US,⁴² but the 1967 Black Cat demonstrations and the 1969 Stonewall Inn riots that are often seen as marking the rise of the modern gay rights movement.⁴³ During this era,

This volume also contains contributions from notable artists and Tom appreciators, including filmmaker John Waters and author Armistead Maupin.

beefcake magazines were critical to the formation of gay male identity. As one commentator has noted:

These magazines functioned not only as a source for pin-up pictures, but also as a ground for the exchange of ideas for fantasies and types of identities. They began to form the image reservoirs from which gay men were able to construct new codes for dress and behavior. They began to constitute a placeless community for gay men before physical communities existed.⁴⁴

Over a 20-year period, Tom contributed over 100 drawings⁴⁵ to Physique Pictorial, with his work often appearing as cover art. The magazine was published by photographer Bob Mizer, himself a major protagonist in the post-war rise of beefcake aesthetics.⁴⁶ Like Tom, Mizer was eventually recognized as a pioneer in homoerotic art.⁴⁷

Significantly, both men were based in Los Angeles. In fact, the confluence of Tom and Bob's practices, along with their individual contributions, was the focus of a 2013-14 MOCA exhibition. The exhibition brought together two artists who lived and practiced in Los Angeles, whose interests – artistic, erotic, political – coalesced into a notable collaboration, and who became “two of the most significant figures of twentieth century erotic art and forefathers of an emergent post-war gay culture.”⁴⁸

In becoming a leading contributor to Physique Pictorial, Tom tapped into American physique imagery, resulting in a historic period of cross-pollination. As Durk Dehner put it in the magazine article aptly titled “Tom of Los Angeles”: “America became (Tom’s) reference library.”⁴⁹ Moreover, during this period, Tom’s art reached a mass audience of gay men, both across the US and in major cities in Europe,⁵⁰ and his work was associated with a genre that was pivotal to the gay male culture of the time. In the early 1950s, the first US homophile⁵¹ organizations had begun to be established.⁵² Growing alongside them were beefcake magazines, which, as Blake (1988) stresses, were “an underground press equal in importance to the first gay political magazines.”^{53,54}

⁵⁴ As discussed by Mustola (2006), Tom’s work was also pivotal to the gay political environment of the time in Finland. The first homophile organizations were established in Nordic countries in the late 1940s and early 1950s, but this was not so in Finland. Attempts to set up such organizations failed because potential members feared that membership lists would fall into the hands of the police, who were then active in investigating and arresting those suspected of homosexuality. Hence, “(i)n the 40s, 50s and 60s Tom’s pictures were the Finnish homosexual liberation movement before organizations were set up and began to operate” (p. 46, emphasis added).

Yet Tom's art was not merely aligned with certain rising cultures of his era; his work influenced those very cultures.⁵⁵ One especially-cited area of Tom's influence concerns his masculinized depictions of gay men. Tom's depictions of hyper-masculine men shaped a generation's ideas of gay male identity and self-image, and they remain pervasive and pertinent today. As Geczy and Karaminas note: "The effect of Tom of Finland on the male, gay community was immense, liberating many from inhibitions and to assert that maleness, such as it is, is an idea to be shared between gay and straight men".⁵⁶ In the era in which Tom was working, Tom's masculinization of gay identity was a brazen counter to effeminized stereotypes of gay men and it has been widely acknowledged as such.⁵⁷ This masculinization has also been praised as destabilizing traditional images of masculinity.⁵⁸ Now and into the future, it can still be seen "as a touchstone for opening up the possibility for different queer identities".⁵⁹

Tom's work resonated with other cultural shifts in post-war America. For example, art critic/historian Edward Lucie-Smith notes that an important factor in the appeal of Tom's work in post-war America was the rise of a culture of bodybuilding in California, which itself had crossover with beefcake aesthetics.^{60,61} Valentine Hooven credits the US beefcake magazines of the 1950s and 1960s with pioneering the health and sports magazines that followed, including those from the bodybuilding and fitness magazine publishing empire founded by Joe Weider,⁶² who moved to California in the 1960s. The circulation of beefcake magazines such as *Physique Pictorial*⁶³ – and thus the increased circulation of Tom's work – increased in parallel with the growth of California's bodybuilding culture in the 1950s and 1960s.

Tom's depiction of bikers also dovetailed with the popularization of outlaw biker culture.⁶⁴ On one level, Hollywood films clearly played a more influential role than Tom's art. Works such as the 1953 Marlon Brando film The Wild One played to mainstream mass audiences, glamorizing male bikers as counter-cultural rebels. Yet Tom mounted his own counter-discourse: his depictions of bikers were a rebellious reminder that male bikers can be enthusiastic participants in gay sex. Indeed, whether he turned his attention to bikers or bodybuilders – or cops or cowboys, or other

⁵⁷ See, for example, Dehner (2009b), p. 9, and Valentine Hooven, 1993, p. 169.

⁵⁸ See Ramakers (2000), who asserts that Tom subverted traditional concepts of masculinity and that Tom's "hyper-masculine universe is not a confirmation of male logic, but its violation" (p. 27).

⁵⁹ Geczy and Karaminas (2013), p. 88. See also Cho (2014), who argues that Tom's drawings of hyper-masculine bodies are laden with comic irony and thus invite our ironic reappraisal.

⁶⁰ Lucie-Smith (2009), p. 22.

⁶¹ In fact, one of Bob Mizer's most notable models was Arnold Schwarzenegger (Hanson, 2009, p. 19).

⁶² Valentine Hooven (1995), p. 158.

⁶³ See Valentine Hooven (1995) for a discussion of Physique Pictorial's swift early commercial success (pp. 32, 44 and 46) and the mass circulation of beefcake magazines (p. 74). By 1955, Physique Pictorial routinely sold over 40,000 copies (p. 74). It also spawned similar publications. Valentine Hooven estimates that the total sales for beefcake magazines in 1955 would have approached one million copies annually (p. 74). These are sizeable figures for specialty magazines of the 1950s (p. 72).

⁶⁴ Lucie-Smith (2009), p. 22.

masculine figures – Tom poached these archetypes from the prevailing homophobic culture and he came to be acknowledged as “the creator of some of the most iconic and readily recognizable imagery of post-war gay culture.”⁶⁵ Thus, it is not so much that Tom’s work simply spoke to certain cultural shifts in post-war America, but that it spoke against them; Tom’s work didn’t merely resonate with the culture but re-imagined it.

Tom’s homoerotic depictions of leather-clad and uniformed men, along with his eventual depictions of BDSM practices between men, were also foundational to the then emerging gay leather culture. As declared by Los Angeles’ own MOCA: “Tom imagined the leather scene by drawing it; real men were inspired by it, and suited themselves up.”⁶⁶

Lucie-Smith also notes that Tom’s early depictions of gay men in Physique Pictorial “fitted in with other aspects of American life: the love of sports, of the outdoors, and the free and easy male camaraderie that survived from the years when many Americans were frontiersmen.”⁶⁷ In fact, Tom’s depiction of men publicly engaging in outdoor sex reflects a particularly significant aspect of his work. The uninhibited public openness among the men in so many of the scenes in Tom’s work, and their evident joy, suggested a carefree sexual freedom. Tom himself spoke of his desire to give gay men:

... an impulse or right of sorts in the form of a picture so that they could openly express their feelings and likes and opinions and attitudes. So that they could smile and feel happy, that it was permitted in a picture even if in practice or in real life it wasn’t the same.⁶⁸

This unrestrained, buoyant freedom lent itself to discourses of gay liberation and, later, gay pride that shaped gay politics in the West. Hence Tom and his art are frequently read in emancipatory terms – for example, in Durk Dehner’s description of Tom as a “liberator”⁶⁹ – or in terms that speak explicitly of pride – as in Tom’s own stated ambition to draw “proud and happy men!”⁷⁰ This consonance with the gay politics of the time helped to cement Tom’s place in post-war gay culture in the Western world.

As Durk Dehner commented in a 2009 interview:

(A) lot of (Tom’s) drawings took place out in nature or out in daytime and there were always smiles amongst the guys and they were happy to be with each other. So, they were having happy relationships in a healthy way and it

5. Recognition by Finland

Starting near the end of Tom's life, the nation of Finland began taking steps to properly acknowledge Tom of Finland as a major international artist and contributor to their cultural heritage. The recognition by the Finnish government and Finland's cultural institutions speak to the international significance of Tom and his work.

- In 1990, the Finnish Comics Society grants Tom the Puupäähattu, their most prestigious award. This was the first Finnish organization to honor Tom of Finland. Tom himself was too gravely ill to attend the ceremony.
- In 1991, the Finnish Film Foundation and the Finnish Broadcasting Company (Yleisradio) produced the documentary Daddy and the Muscle Academy, written and directed by Ilppo Pohjola. First aired on national television in Finland with theatrical release in Helsinki, the film would travel to film festivals in Berlin, New York, Toronto, San Francisco, and Los Angeles. Tom himself was able to see the documentary at his Helsinki apartment shortly before his passing.
- The Otava Publishing Company, a publisher of Finnish literature since 1890, publishes Tom of Finland: His Life and Times in 1992, written by F. Valentine Hooven III. The publication is launched with press and Q & A with author and Durk Dehner at the Academic Bookstore (Akateeminen Kirjakauppa) in Helsinki, the largest bookstore in the Nordic countries. Later released in German by Bruno Gmünder Verlag, in English by St. Martin's Press, and in French by Gemini.
- The first solo exhibition of Tom's work in Finland is held in Helsinki in 1992, at Galerie Pelin. The works were from Tom of Finland Foundation. Kiasma, the Museum of Contemporary Art in Helsinki, purchases two works for their permanent collection. Kaarina, Finland, the town where Tom was born and raised, acquires one sketch to exhibit at their council hall.
- In 1999, a group exhibition (Ruralia, Art of the Countryside) held at the Pori Art Museum includes Tom's works. That same year, a solo retrospective exhibition of Tom of Finland is held at the Finnish Institute in Paris (The Most Famous Finn) and later travels to the Jyväskylä Art Museum.
- In 2006, a solo exhibition (Ennennäkemätöntä – Unforeseen) is held at the Helsinki City Museum, curated by Berndt Arell from collections in Northern Europe.

⁷¹ Dehner (2009a).

- Tom of Finland (Retrospective Exhibition) is presented by Turku ÅBO 2011 – Turku Foundation, Homotopia and ToFF in 2011. Curated by Gary Everett, artistic director of Liverpool’s Homotopia, 64 works from ToFF’s permanent collection are exhibited for a year. For the first time the Finnish Ministry of Education and Culture contributes funds to an exhibition with Tom of Finland. With over 80,000 visitors, guests including the Presidents of Finland and Austria. Three nephews of Tom’s were given a guided tour with a luncheon in their honor and paid a visit to the original schoolhouse where the family went to school and Tom was raised. This marked a new beginning for the Laaksonen family to publicly show their pride for Tom and his legacy.
- In the fall of 2014, the Finnish Postal Service (Itella Posti Oy) release official postage stamps using Tom’s work. Working closely with the ToFF who spearheaded the effort, works were selected from the collection at TOM House.

Tom of Finland postage stamp released by the Finnish Postal Service Itella Posti Oy (2014)

The Finnish Postal Service stated in their press release:

*His emphatically masculine homoerotic drawings have attained iconic status in their genre and had an influence on, for instance, pop culture and fashion. In his works, Tom of Finland utilized the self-irony and humor typical of subcultures. During his career, Tom of Finland produced more than 3,500 drawings... The drawings on the stamp sheet represent strong and confident male figures typical of their designer.*⁷²

- In 2014, Tom's birthplace of Kaarina, Finland awards the Tom of Finland Foundation their Medal of Honor, recognizing the organization's efforts to preserve the legacy of Tom's work and his contributions.

6. Conclusion

*On a palm tree-lined street in Echo Park sits the Tom of Finland Foundation, a site that testifies to both personal and historical memory.*⁷³
Museum of Contemporary Art (Los Angeles)

In 1997 at the Los Angeles County Museum of Art, a drawing was hung between the works of Matisse and David Hockney for an exhibition. That drawing was by Tom of Finland. The exhibition, Master Drawings in the Los Angeles County Museum of Art, was a survey of five centuries of European and American drawings in the museum's permanent collection.⁷⁴ The show included the work of artists such as Picasso, Van Gogh, Degas, Chagall, and various Italian Old Masters.⁷⁵

This moment speaks to two points that are of importance to this application. The first point: that Tom of Finland holds a distinctive place as a cultural producer. His creative strategy was unique for its time: he drew "against the grain", appropriating various hyper-masculine archetypes for the imaginations and desires of gay male audiences. Moreover, Tom's influence was and remains uniquely broad, such that an image by Tom of Finland can still just as suitably hang on the wall of a gay leather bar as it can between a Matisse and a Hockney.

The second point: that the city of Los Angeles has been of vital importance to Tom of Finland and his pioneering influence on gay culture and the broader culture at large. This is in large part because the physical site that became and remains the strongest focal point for Tom's work and legacy is not in Tom's native Finland, but at TOM House.

Today, the invaluable material objects and ongoing cultural activities at the house are telling facts of Tom's legacy and its embodiment in TOM House. As well as protecting and preserving Tom's work, the house is also host to vibrant events, such as its art fair and art classes, that aim to cultivate the next generation of artists who are producing erotic art. As Durk Dehner has noted:

(TOM House) really is the center of really what was him and what is him. It's actually a very lively place also because I think that it actually continues to celebrate that point that he was actually making in his drawings.⁷⁶

Year-round, the house receives local, national and international visitors from Tom of Finland appreciators from many walks of life. Among the visitors to this historically and culturally significant property are gay men who make "pilgrimages" to the property. These are men whose lives have been changed by engaging with Tom's art. The stories that these men have to tell about the impact of Tom's work on their lives reflect the fact that "Tom of Finland made as much of an impact on the lives of individual men as he did on the history of masculine representation."⁷⁷

The identification of TOM House with Tom of Finland has been reflected in numerous published works, many of which have been cited in this statement. This has been especially cemented by the recent release of the book TOM House: Tom of Finland in Los Angeles.⁷⁸ Locally, the house is also known within Los Angeles' LGBT and leather communities as a reference point for Tom, his work and his legacy. Moreover, in 2014, TOM House was included amongst the identified resources in the SurveyLA: LGBT Historic Context Statement, which was prepared for the City of Los Angeles' own Office of Historic Resources.⁷⁹

In 2000, the Los Angeles County Museum of Art again included Tom's work in an exhibition. Timed to mark the 150th anniversary of California's statehood, this exhibition examined both the state of California and its cultural legacy. The inclusion of Tom's work was a testament to the strength of Tom's local ties to the state, through his residence at and identification with TOM House in Los Angeles. The name of the exhibition: Made in California.

Tom of Finland will always be associated with his birth country of Finland, owing at least to his working name as an artist. But the site that is above all identified with the essence of this artist is TOM House, at 1421 Laveta Terrace in Echo Park, Los Angeles.

Tom Of Finland Dead At 71

Tom of Finland, the best-known homoerotic artist of the 20th century, died of an emphysema-induced stroke in Helsinki on November 7.

In the course of his career, Tom saw his artwork go from being unpublishable everywhere in the world to receiving worldwide recognition. In recent years, Tom of Finland drawings have been collected by such celebrities as Andy Warhol, Keith Haring, and Robert Mapplethorpe. They have been auctioned at Christies, exhibited at the Whitney Museum in New York, and favorably reviewed in serious art periodicals. The Cartoonists' Society of his home country elected him Cartoonist of the Year in February 1991. The Finnish Film Board financed an hour-long documentary which was screened to audience and critical acclaim. It will be shown there on nationwide television early in 1992. A biography from the largest publishing house in Finland will be printed in January 1992, with probably German and English editions to follow.

The name 'Tom of Finland' was born in 1957 when Bob Mizer, publisher of the popular muscle magazine Physique Pictorial, wanted to print drawings sent to him from Helsinki. The artist did not want his name used even 8,000 miles away, but Mizer figured that the artist's real name - Touko Laaksonen - would not play well with Americans anyway. Since Touko was already signing his work "Tom," when the spring 1957 issue of Physique Pictorial appeared, the laughing lumberjack on the cover was credited to "Tom of Finland" and the rest is gay history.

The man Tom of Finland was born on May 6, 1920, in a semi-rural suburb of Turku, the ancient capital of Finland. He was already drawing comic strips by the age of four. After high school, he moved to Helsinki to study art, but World War II intervened and he spent five years in the uniform of a Finnish Army lieutenant. After the war, Tom supported himself by playing piano in restaurants and clubs at night and doing freelance advertising and window display by day.

In spite of the unprecedented popularity of his erotic artwork, it would be 1973 before Tom was able to concentrate fully on what he always called his "dirty drawings," but once he did, Tom combined a near-photorealistic attention to detail with his wildest sexual fantasies to produce a body of work that, for sheer homoeroticism, will probably never be surpassed.

Tom created literally thousands of his "Tom's Men." Although his leather men are the epitome of rough and rugged, they are never dangerous. With all his passion for the heaviest of sexual imagery, Tom strove to present positive role models in his art. In the last 10 years, he added condoms and safe sex admonitions to his work. "I am not ashamed that I draw men having sex. I work hard to make sure they are proud men having happy sex!"

In 1986, Tom and his business partner Durk Dehner formed the nonprofit Tom of Finland Foundation. The goal is to have a museum of erotic art as a safe home for Tom and similar artists, gay and otherwise. The Foundation and its ~~subsidiary~~ will continue to work toward that end. To make a memorial gift contributing to such a museum may send it to the Tom of Finland Foundation, Box 26658, Los Angeles, CA 90026, or call (213) 250-1685.

CERTIFICATE OF RECOGNITION is hereby presented to

Tom of Finland
FOUNDATION

On behalf of the City of Los Angeles and the 13th Council District, I would like to recognize Tom of Finland on the occasion of the 9th Annual Tom of Finland Foundation Erotic Art Weekend in Los Angeles.

The Tom of Finland Foundation was established by Durk Dehner and his friend Touko Laaksonen, a.k.a. Tom of Finland. As Tom had established worldwide recognition as the master of homo-erotic art, the Foundation's original purpose was to preserve his vast catalog of work. Several years later the scope was widened to offer a safe haven for all erotic art in response to rampant discrimination against art that portrayed sexual behavior or generated a sexual response.

Best wishes on continued growth and success!

“Don Knotts at the Leather Mansion”

—John Waters

Once upon a time, I went to the Tom of Finland Foundation in Los Angeles for one of their annual fundraising celebrations. I had heard about this amazing mansion filled with pornographic archives, dungeons, S & M offices, and a huge collection of erotic male art, but I knew I didn't have the proper outfit to wear. John Waters in leather chaps, no pants, and motorcycle boots is just not a look anybody would be comfortable with. The fact that my friend, Greg Gorman, another “civilian” was going with me, gave me a false sense of fashion confidence.

Of course, once we got there, we saw every single person but us was dressed in full-fetish S & M gear. Durk Dehner, the great heir apparent to Tom of Finland and top international cheerleader for the leather lifestyle, greeted us at the door and showed no sign of dominance-disappointment at our relatively normal cotton clothes. Remembering how I had unsuccessfully tried to talk my way into “uniform night” at The Mineshaft in New York in the '70s, by claiming my suit was “plain clothes detective,” I was relieved I didn't have to pretend anymore.

Durk welcomed us warmly and introduced me to my “slave” for the evening. Good God. A waiting-for-orders, white-man slave dressed head-to-toe in leather. “Really...I'm fine...don't need a thing,” I mumbled to the clearly disappointed masochist who seemed totally helpless without a command to obey. Seeing the crushed look on his face, I finally asked him for a drink. “YES, SIR!” he bellowed in sexual submission, and I felt even more like Don Knotts. I learned from this exchange, however. Today, whenever a young male fan calls me “sir,” I say, “Please don't call me 'sir' in a non-sexual way.” Their faces pale, much like mine must have that night in the leather mansion.

Tom of Finland is, of course, a great artist. There can really be no debate about that anymore. His drawings are beautiful, confident, sexy, totally original and butch-elegant. Tom of Finland uses great wit in his work, but he's never funny. Can “funny” ever really be butch? Is humor, by definition, a little bit nelly? Tom is also a classic. He invented a look, and you better respect it. He may have been a “daddy”-type later in life, but I'm not so sure he would have approved of the “bear” movement. After all, isn't a “bear” just a Tom of Finland man who let his body go?

Months later, I went back to buy a Tom of Finland drawing. As an art collector, it was an experience like no other. Durk, now in art dealer mode, answered the front door in full bondage gear, even though our appointment was at 10:00 AM. He ushered me into his "killing room," (the term dealers use for their back room where the sale is closed), and showed me Tom's work that was still available. I felt like I was in the Vatican. Never had a dealer's commitment to their artist's work been so obvious. Durk was not only devoted to Tom of Finland's drawings, he had become one.

I selected a lovely little signed pencil sketch of a handsome stud rimming a butch biker and wrote out the check. Money is rarely spent so well. The drawing now hangs in a hall right outside my bedroom in my Baltimore house, and every time I pass it, I feel happier. I wonder what the cleaning lady thinks? She's never mentions it.

Bigger is better: The complete life and work of the artist Tom of Finland

In 1998, TASCHEN introduced the world to the masterful art of Touko Laaksonen with The Art of Pleasure. Prior to that, Laaksonen, better known as Tom of Finland, enjoyed an intense cult following in the international gay community but was largely unknown to the broader audience. The Art of Pleasure gave Tom well-deserved recognition and increased his following exponentially; Tom of Finland XXL will fix him forever in the realm of fine art.

With dimensions of 29 by 40.5cm and 704 pages, Tom of Finland XXL contains nearly 1000 images, covering 6 decades of the artist's career. The work was gathered from all known collections across the US and Europe with the help of the Tom of Finland Foundation and features many drawings, paintings and preparatory sketches that have never been reproduced in any book. Other images have only been seen out of context and will be presented here in the sequential order Tom intended for full artistic appreciation and erotic impact. This elegant oversized volume will showcase the full range of Tom's talent, from sensitive portraits to frank sexual pleasure to tender expressions of love to Tom's haunting tributes to young men struck down by the AIDS epidemic.

Completing this collector's edition are eight specially-commissioned essays on Tom's social and personal impact by Camille Paglia, John Waters, Armistead Maupin, Todd Oldham, and others, plus a scholarly analysis of individual drawings by art historian Edward Lucie-Smith. For the man—or woman—who thinks bigger is better, Tom of Finland XXL is certain to satisfy.

About the editor:

Dian Hanson is TASCHEN's sexy book editor. As a 25-year veteran of men's magazine publishing, she edited titles including Puritan, OUI, Outlaw Biker, Juggs, and Leg Show. Her many books for TASCHEN include The Big Book of Breasts and The Big Penis Book.

OF FINLAND
LIFE AND WORK
OF A GAY HERO

These changes paralleled those occurring in the gay world at large, some of which had been influenced, if not actually initiated, by Tom's drawings. From 1957 on, Tom's art promulgated powerfully masculine images which became mainstays of gay masturbation fantasies. In the wake of the 1969 Stonewall riots and the advent of gay pride, gay men began to try to be Tom's men. In the seventies, San Francisco's "Castro clone" look—Levi's, boots, and work shirts—swept the gay scene. Super-butch haircuts and outfits and attitudes continued to spread in the eighties.

The timing in which Durk entered into Tom's life was nothing less than providence. If one considers one's life in eras then as Durk was entering into Tom's life, Veli, his life partner of 28 years, was leaving. Veli's throat cancer took him and left Tom to travel to the states to live with Durk and his household for extended periods of time. This was the leather brotherhood that Tom created in his drawings. He had his leather brothers in Finland, with the creation of the MSC motorcycle club, and now he was part of the Dehner leather brotherhood in the U.S. as well. It meant the acquisition of new leathers. Tom received a new LAPD issue leather jacket from the household and had himself made a pair of chaps from local leather maker Sterling. Tom looked good at his first public appearance in Los Angeles at the opening of his exhibition at Eons Gallery in 1977.

Tom guest lectures at California Institute for the Arts (CalArts), part of the 1985 Graduate Lecture Series, professor/artist Mike Kelley.

Tom of Finland has been an incredible inspiration to my work and within the gay community, as well.
—Mike Kelley

Tom could have made things easier on himself if he had been willing to play—as Quaintance did with his Old West and mythological themes—to the double standard that censored historical erotica a little less strictly. (Quaintance had begun to hint, in works like “Saturday Night,” that maybe his cowboys were more interested in each other than in schoolmarms and dancehall girls. More than likely, he would have been in the forefront of the coming sexual revolution but, tragically, George Quaintance died just as Tom’s first works were being published in 1957.)

Tom did not want to set his drawings in ancient Rome. The here and now was what turned him on, so the here and now was where he placed his drawings. That was the second aspect of his work that was new to the viewers of the day. His drawings seem to be happening right around the corner and that added to their erotic charge. Many newly-aware gay men were immensely relieved to learn from Tom’s drawings that homosexuality did not die out with the fall of the Roman Empire—and they continue to teach that awareness to a whole new generation today.

Durk, Bob Mizer from AMG and Tom, 1986

Bob Mizer, owner of Athletic Model Guild, worked with Tom from 1957 through 1975 without ever meeting. When Tom first started staying in Southern California they had the opportunity to socialize—Tom going down to Bob’s studio to watch him shoot and sometimes have lunch. Tom and Durk would also go down for weekly screenings of Bob’s film footage. Bob returned most of the drawings that Tom had sent him over the years. It was his way of insuring the TOM legacy, as nearly two hundred works came to ToFF’s permanent collection.

Tom's passion continues ...

Twenty-one years later, Tom of Finland's influence is still felt by new generations of all orientations. In 2006, the Museum of Modern Art in New York accepted five Tom of Finland drawings into their permanent collection as part of a much larger gift from The Judith Rothschild Foundation. The trustee of The Judith Rothschild Foundation, Harvey S. Shipley Miller, said so eloquently, "Tom of Finland is one of the five most influential artists of the twentieth century. As an artist he was superb, as an influence he was transcendent."

Harvey's statement reflected what I instinctively knew as a young man, that somehow Tom's life had to be documented and his work preserved. Now, Tom's message is permanently fused into the fabric of modern-day culture.

Tom's goal was to perfect his technical ability as an artist, to rise above language barriers and to successfully convey that men—his men—all men are proud, sexual, defined and fully realized by nature. Gay men are complete, happy without shame or guilt.

When an influence such as Tom's is absorbed into society it ceases to be a separate element, and therefore, difficult to distinguish after the fact. We don't even notice when in time these major cultural shifts take place.

The physiques of Tom's men inspired developing gay men to become what they became. Knowing it was now possible, they went to gyms in masses to develop their bodies and in turn, ignited the entire culture and with it came the explosion of the fitness movement which spread health clubs across all nations.

The clothing/gear worn by the men in Tom's drawings sparked designers such as Tom Ford and Jean Paul Gaultier, and their Tom-influenced designs revolutionized the men's fashion industry. Bands and their lead singers, like Judas Priest, Freddy Mercury and the Village People, adopted styles that were the result of being reared on Tom of Finland. They exposed the broader culture to the male sexual icons of Tom's men, bringing them to life.

The gay liberation, gay pride and coming-out movements, the proliferation of gay bars and especially the leather/biker subculture, have their roots embedded with Tom's influence. Tom was an instrument that created the archetypes needed at the time for redefining homosexuals—first by gays themselves; then, eventually, by all of society.

Tom's work favored the "manly man." His motivation? This type definitely turned Tom on, yet he consistently chose "butch" because manliness had always been denied the homosexual—as if it was solely owned by the heterosexual world! Tom felt this unjust and wanted to equalize the playing field. He sought to broaden the vocabulary of what gay men could be.

Members of the Queer Nation organization protested Tom of Finland not long after his death, calling him a "sell out"—only drawing what they saw as "straights." They were too young to know the history of why the artist chose the super-masculine male for a role model. Tom wished everyone to have the freedom to be what they wanted to be by their own definition. Gay men of different generations have found Tom's work as the centerpiece of gay events and in gay establishments worldwide. Tom of Finland is the declaration of who we are: proud to be gay.

—Durk Dehner

Tom of Finland was a groundbreaking queer artist, a subversive, an activist. His drawings have provided developing Homosexuals with empowering role models: icons. His creations, "Tom's Men," broadened global society's definition of what a queer could be. He gave us permission to be. And influenced artists that stood on his shoulders, with what they would see.

Hidden behind a tall eugenia hedge in the unassuming Echo Park neighborhood of Los Angeles, at 1421 Laveta Terrace, stands an Arts-and-Crafts bungalow where Touko Laaksonen spent much of the last ten years of his life. Better known as Tom of Finland, Laaksonen produced an enormous body of work whose radical and utopian depictions of masculine confidence, fantasy, and pleasure influenced reality with such dominance that they liberated generations and became a permanent cornerstone of gay culture. Today, the Laveta Terrace bungalow is home to the Tom of Finland Foundation, run by Durk Dehner — a former model and Tom’s agent, friend, lover, muse, and business partner for many years — and his partner Sharp. An informal museum of Tom’s life, the foundation houses his archive as well as thousands of mementos from a career that spanned four decades. Art, leather, and dark-wood trim permeate the house, creating a heavy masculine energy, whether in the cozy ski-lodge-style living room or in the guest rooms, which are now used for artist’s residencies. But there are light touches too: a Tom of Finland cookie jar, two Michelangelos flanking the main bathroom’s sink, a fully-functioning phallic toilet flush, and a wall covered in celebrity photographs showing Dehner with the likes of Grace Jones and Liza Minnelli. The backyard, fitted out with a fun cage and an outdoor throne with peculiar openings, overlooks the Hollywood Hills. It is here, at a cabana-meets-boot-camp outdoor bar, that the foundation hosts its regular parties which, Dehner warns, are not necessarily for the faint of heart (a dungeon-style basement is reserved for selected visitors only).

But it’s not all fun and games for Dehner and Sharp. Under their direction, the foundation’s mission has expanded: as well as celebrating, preserving, and protecting Tom’s art, it is also an active community center, and promotes erotic art in general. All available wall space showcases works depicting some form of beauty, decadence, desire, hedonism, love, and lust. And while many appear to be by the master, they’re not all real Tom of Finlands. “Unlike most artists, Tom was never offended by others copying his style — he was always flattered,” says Dehner, who keeps the many donated Tom-inspired pieces in annual rotation. The foundation even commissions new pieces, like the trompe-l’oeil murals with strategic holes that turn viewers into voyeurs.

There is one room, however, on the third floor, that has a very different aura. Quiet, uncluttered, almost monastic, with just a bed and a bare-bones drafting table, it was Tom’s private room. Since the artist’s death in 1991, Dehner and Sharp have preserved it exactly the way it was, with Tom’s leather jacket hanging by the bedside and his sharpened pencils on the desk. “Tom always enjoyed all the visitors and wild events we hosted here over the years,” says Dehner, “but through it all, he would always find time to slip away to work in the attic, putting in many hours, every day. He was absolutely driven to make his work. It was his life’s mission.”

Introduction

Bob Mizer & Tom of Finland is the first American museum exhibition devoted to the art of Bob Mizer (1922–92) and Tom of Finland (Touko Laaksonen, 1920–91), two of the most significant figures of twentieth-century erotic art and forefathers of an emergent postwar gay culture. The exhibition features a selection of Tom of Finland's masterful drawings and collages, alongside Mizer's rarely seen photo-collage "catalogue boards," as well as a comprehensive collection of his groundbreaking magazine Physique Pictorial, where drawings by Tom of Finland were first published in 1957.

Tom of Finland is the creator of some of the most iconic and readily recognizable imagery of postwar gay culture. He produced thousands of images beginning in the 1940s, robbing straight, homophobic culture of its most virile and masculine archetypes (bikers, hoodlums, lumberjacks, cops, cowboys, and sailors) and recasting them—through deft skill and fantastic imagination—as unapologetic, self-aware, and boastfully proud enthusiasts of gay sex. His most innovative achievement, worked out in fastidious renderings of gear, props, settings, and power relations inherent therein, was to create depictions that would eventually become the foundation of an emerging gay leather culture. Tom of Finland imagined the leather scene by drawing it; real men were inspired by it and suited themselves up.

Mizer began photographing as early as 1942, but unlike many of his contemporaries working in the subculture of illicit "physique" nudes, he took the Hollywood star-system approach and founded the Athletic Model Guild in 1945. This film and photography studio specialized in handsome, natural-bodied, boy-next-door talent as opposed to exclusively muscle-bound figures, which was standard at the time. In his myriad satirical prison dramas, sci-fi flix, domesticated bachelor scenarios, and elegantly captivating studio sessions, Mizer photographed and filmed over 10,000 models at a rough estimate of 60 photographs a day, seven days a week for almost 50 years. He always presented a fresh-faced and free, unashamed and gregarious, and natural and light-hearted approach to male nudity and intimate physical contact between men. For these groundbreaking perspectives in eroticized representation alone, Mizer ranks with Alfred Kinsey at the forefront of the sexual revolution.

Though Tom of Finland did not start spending time in Los Angeles until the early 1980s, he had long known of Mizer and the photographer's work through Physique Pictorial, the house publication and sales tool for Athletic Model Guild. It was to this magazine that the artist first sent his drawings, and it was Mizer—finding the artworks remarkable and seeking to promote them on the magazine's cover, but believing the artist's Finnish name (Touko Laaksonen) would be too difficult for his clientele—who is responsible for the now famous "Tom of Finland" pseudonym.

By the time the gay liberation movement swept through the United States in the late 1960s, both Mizer and Tom of Finland were already well known and widely celebrated as veritable pioneers of gay art. Decades before the police raids on the Stonewall Inn (1969) and the Black Cat Tavern (1966)—a time when the closet was the norm and there was no "gay community"—Mizer and Tom of Finland's evocative and lusty representations of masculine desire and joyful, eager sex between men proliferated and were disseminated worldwide. If these artists were not ahead of their time, they might just have foreseen and even invented a time.

Spanning five decades, the exhibition seeks a wider appreciation for Tom of Finland and Bob Mizer's work, considering their aesthetic influence on generations of artists, both gay and straight, among them: Kenneth Anger, Rainer Werner Fassbinder, David Hockney, G. B. Jones, Mike Kelley, Robert Mapplethorpe, Henrik Olesen, Jack Pierson, Andy Warhol, and John Waters. The exhibition also acknowledges the profound cultural and social impact both artists have made, especially in providing open, powerful imagery for a community of desires at a time when doing so was still very much criminal. Presenting the broader historical context and key aspects of their shared interests and working relationship, as well as more in-depth solo rooms dedicated to each artist, the exhibition establishes the art-historical importance of the staggering work of these legendary figures.

Tom of Finland

This selection of drawings by Tom of Finland communicates the range of the artist's subjects, formats, and methods. The finely rendered graphite and pen-and-ink drawings for which he is best known appeared in several forms over the years, from individual finished drawings to serialized narratives such as KAKE, MIKE, and RINGO. Prior to his finished works, Tom of Finland would often produce preparatory drawings, quick sketches, and detail views. Even before this, he kept reference folders of images cut out from newspapers and magazines, a group of which can be seen here. These "collages" were not for publication but for the artist's private use, and they show groupings of expressions, postures, costumes, and body types that were essential to Tom of Finland in developing his own signature style.

Tom of Finland

This selection of drawings by Tom of Finland communicates the range of the artist's whimsical, baroque, and muscular, "finely rendered graphics and pen-and-ink drawings to which he is best known as creator of a unique style and the names of which are EKKO, SMOG, and FINLAND. These titles have become Tom of Finland's most often produced proprietary drawings, which continue to draw much of the artist's fame. These drawings, which are often made in black ink on white paper, are a group of works that he has used to illustrate his "fantasy" men and for publication but to the artist's private use, and they show groups of men in various positions, sometimes, and they have that same essential Tom of Finland in developing his own signature style.

Famed erotic artist Tom of Finland made as much of an impact on the lives of individual men as he did on the history of masculine representation. On a palm tree-lined street in Echo Park sits the Tom of Finland Foundation, a site that testifies to both personal and historical memory. Foundation co-founder and former Bruce Weber model Durk Dehner met Tom because of a compelling image on a bathroom wall, and soon became the artist's muse, patron, and longtime friend. In this short video, Dehner and foundation vice president S.R. Sharp discuss Tom's radical imaginary, his command of the gay male gaze, how Tom of Finland got his name, and why Tom made the move to Los Angeles. Dehner has preserved the home he shared with Tom as a homage to Tom's legacy, and to this day, the home remains open to the public.

Tom of Finland in Los Angeles

Drew Mackie

To those familiar with Tom of Finland, the very mention of his name brings to mind a display of prime beef that would put a butcher shop to shame. That's not an inaccurate image, but it doesn't come close to explaining the importance of Touko Laaksonen's art. His masterful drawings of the male form didn't just echo an emerging segment of gay male culture; they helped shape it.

Born Touko Laaksonen in Finland in 1920, Tom earned fans in the U.S. starting in 1957, with the publication of his first illustration in Physique Pictorial, a jolly lumberjack, shirtless and balancing on a log floating down a river. A Bob Mizer-produced magazine, Physique Pictorial boasted muscle-bound men in "health and fitness" spreads that circumvented laws prohibiting gay pornography in the United States. But more than just titillate readers, Tom of Finland sought to create a happy, masculine identity for the gay men who had otherwise only seen themselves portrayed in culture as comical sissies or psychological defects. In his essay for the Taschen collection Tom of Finland XXL, John Waters calls Tom the grand-daddy of this cultural image of the big, swaggering gay man. "His drawings are beautiful, confident, sexy, totally original and butch-elegant. ... He invented a look, and you better respect it."

Durk Dehner, the president and co-founder of the Tom of Finland Foundation, agreed. "When I was growing up, there was nothing positive about being a homosexual," he said. "He gave the young, developing homosexual imagery that they could actually attach themselves to and feel good about."

By the time the Tom of Finland Foundation was established in Echo Park in 1984, the SoCal gym boom had made those primo physiques ever-so-slightly more attainable, and Freddy Mercury and Rob Halford had rocked decidedly Tom of Finland-esque aesthetics onstage. In that same Taschen book, Frankie Goes to Hollywood singer Holly Johnson, who once commissioned Tom of Finland-inspired costumes for the band's touring show, cites the more military-inspired aspects of the Tom of Finland look as having helped inspire the most subversively homoerotic movies in history. Writes Johnson,

The '80s blockbuster "Top Gun" drew heavily on the visual theme of uniformed male partners. Tom Cruise's Maverick character played out a heterosexual love story that could not disguise the homoerotic setting. The liberating effect of Tom's men smiling lustfully in the bright light of day cannot be underestimated. No longer confined to the subterranean meat mazes of popular porn scenarios, his finely crafted icons are now out there for all to enjoy.

Considering how international this new archetype for gay male masculinity had become, it's remarkable to think of Tom fine-tuning it in Echo Park, where he'd escape the cold Finnish winter months until his death in 1991. As a result his time here, Los Angeles benefits from the foundation's archives, which include not only the largest collection of Tom's work, but also the largest archive of erotic art in the world, at well over 100,000 items. The collection includes all manner of subject matter -- not just the homomasculine but also any art that by virtue of its erotic nature might encounter resistance from mainstream artistic society. Of course, the foundation focuses on promoting Tom of Finland art, and Dehner proudly recalled how in 1998 LACMA acquired a work of Tom's that ended up being displayed between a Hockney and a Matisse.

What perhaps makes the foundation's collection so outstanding, however, is its inclusion of artwork that even Tom of Finland diehards likely haven't seen before -- collage and photography. Some of the collages are visible at the the Tom of Finland-Bob Mizer exhibition currently at MOCA's Pacific Design Center. Image boards, in a sense, these reference pages feature the images that would eventually inspire Tom drawings, just jumbled into a more surreal anatomical combination than even his most populated artworks.

The real treasure hiding in the foundation -- in Tom's well-preserved bedroom, no less -- would have to be the photographs. Many of Tom's drawings were preceded by monochrome photographs that Tom would take of his models. Though Tom was never known for his photography, the shots are well-composed to the point that they could stand on their own as works of art. But the fact that Tom had to develop the film himself -- the subject matter would have often prevented him from going to commercial photo developers -- meant that art was truly and purely his, start to finish, conception to finished drawing.

In fact, Los Angeles has been home to few more masterful artists of the human body. Though Tom certainly focused almost exclusively on the male anatomy, he drew them in an idealized way that's unattainable except for the biggest of the big men on campus. Even with all the manly posturing, however, there's a certain kind of glee that holds these men back from full-on godhood: They're just too comfortable in their human forms, and they just find too much joy in the simple act of being human.

It's that joy that drew an eclectic mix to the opening of the Tom of Finland-Bob Mizer show in late November. True, the crowd included many gay men who grew up looking at Tom of Finland art, who were for the first time seeing them in high-res, offline, non-pirated format that allowed them to see every pencil swipe of hair on every exposed chest. But the crowd also included hand-holding straight couples, groups of women, blue-hairs and others that you might not necessarily expect at an ostensibly gay-centric, West Hollywood-based art show.

Untitled (From Jungle Seafood story), 1972, Courtesy Tom of Finland Foundation

This fact may be surprising to both admirers of Tom of Finland art and those just learning about it.

Dehner has a theory about the art's potential for wide appeal. "Everyone loves Tom of Finland," he said, noting that the turnout at most exhibitions is usually less than half gay people. "Any exposure they've had to him makes them feel good." Dehner said he recalled watching the French photographer Rachel Laurent stride around the room at a 2006 exhibition of Tom of Finland art in Paris. She looked ecstatic, and when Dehner asked her what she thought of the art, she offered the following response: "I have arrived at the bastion of freedom. Displayed here are the works of a man that didn't cower or inhibit himself in his expression of what was in his heart. He represents freedom for all of us."

Untitled (No.1 from Cyclist and the Farm Boy series), 1973, Courtesy Tom of Finland Foundation

Indeed, that freedom may be the most fantastical element to Tom of Finland's decidedly unreal works. Walking into the MOCA exhibition, you'd most likely be impressed most by the bulges -- muscular and otherwise, leather-covered and bare. Look long enough, however, and you'll notice that the men depicted are out in the open, experiencing a level of abandon that's rare even in the most liberal of contemporary societies. "The art shows men young and buff and happy, enjoying life without inhibition," Dehner said, explaining that this love of freedom transcends gender and sexuality. "Today, women are more liberated. And straight men are much more comfortable with themselves -- not so afraid of their own. And so Tom of Finland's men are great for anyone. They give a context for where our whole culture has gone."

Dehner -- who was also partner, model and muse to Tom of Finland, and whose likeness can be seen throughout Tom's work -- doesn't hesitate to underscore the importance of an artist whose vision became part of living, breathing culture and whose vision was so uniquely his own. "His technique is truly masterful, and that's why perception of him has changed from a pornographer to an illustrator to an artist and now finally to a master artist. He did not do just one masterwork; he did several, which is very rare."

It remains to be seen how public opinion about Tom of Finland will evolve, especially in comparison to how mainstream sexual mores also change. In the book "Tom of Finland: His Life and Times," Tom revealed a measured vision of his legacy and looked toward the distant future with reserved optimism.

"I know my little 'dirty drawings' are never going to hang in the main salons of the Louvre, but it would be nice if -- I would like to say 'when,' but I better say 'if' -- our world learns to accept all the different ways of loving. Then maybe I could have a place in one of the smaller side rooms."

The Tom of Finland-Bob Mizer show is on display at MOCA's Pacific Design Center through January 26.

In a palm tree-lined street in Echo Park, an increasingly hip neighbourhood near downtown Los Angeles, you'll find a beautifully preserved craftsman house from 1910. Apart from the 12ft hedges that run across the front of the property, little would seem to distinguish the residence from its well-kept neighbours. Step inside, however, and a different world comes into view.

Hundreds of works of erotic art spread across virtually all the 17 rooms in the house, as well as its backyard patio and terraced gardens. They range from a sculpted phallus called Disco Boy, made of tiny squares of mirrored glass, to a bird feeder fitted with delicately hand-painted scenes of bondage and discipline. A working fountain incorporating a urinal has been constructed in the backyard, while faux frescoes on the first and second floor ceilings present a veritable orgy of men pleasuring themselves and one another.

The house is the headquarters of the Tom of Finland Foundation, an organisation devoted to preserving the legacy of the most influential homoerotic artist of the 20th century. Across a career that spanned nearly 50 years, Tom created thousands of drawings of muscle-bound, bulgingly priapic sailors, soldiers, cops, cowboys, bikers and lifeguards. His pictures delight in the sheen of leather boots and motorcycle jackets and in the snug fit of sailor trousers and muscle shirts.

The male figures wearing those boots and trousers engage in exuberant acts of sexual exchange, often leaning toward fetishism and light bondage. For all their explicitness, Tom's drawings remain lodged within a fantasy world of illustration where every guy is impossibly well-endowed and endlessly open to the next erotic adventure.

The Tom of Finland house is also the private residence of Durk Dehner and SR Sharp, a couple who serve as the foundation's president and vice president, respectively. Dehner, a close friend, model and muse for Tom of Finland, co-founded the organisation with the artist in 1984. Originally conceived as a means to promote Tom's work and preserve his legacy, the foundation eventually expanded to support a wide range of erotic art – by both men and women – through exhibitions, life-drawing classes, erotic art fairs and an artist-in-residence programme.

The foundation's early years coincided with the height of the Aids epidemic in America. Artists concerned that their work would be forgotten or destroyed after their deaths bequeathed it to the foundation knowing it would be archived and lovingly preserved. The foundation now possesses a permanent collection of approximately 3,500 works, some 150 of which are displayed in the home at any one time, often in thematic exhibitions curated by Sharp and Dehner. In addition, original drawings by Tom, as well as numerous reproductions and monumental blow-ups of his work, appear throughout the house and grounds.

The artist, born Touko Laaksonen, gained his professional moniker in 1957, when his drawings first appeared in the American magazine Physique Pictorial. The magazine's photographer/publisher, Bob Mizer, felt the artist's foreign name would be too difficult for readers to pronounce or remember so he dubbed him 'Tom of Finland'.

During the 1980s, Tom split his time between Helsinki and Los Angeles, ultimately basing himself entirely at the house in Echo Park (Dehner had purchased the home with friends). Tom's studio/bedroom in the converted attic has been preserved» much as the artist left it, with leather pillowcases on the bed and pencils and chalk at the drafting table. Also displayed in the room are Tom's motorcycle jacket, boots and a selection of his beloved uniforms, including those of a Finnish soldier, an American sailor, a German police officer and a Canadian Mountie.

While unapologetically pornographic, Tom's work has increasingly been recognised as high art. The permanent collections of both the Museum of Modern Art in New York and the Los Angeles County Museum of Art include drawings by the artist and, this past June, a selection of Tom's work was shown (and sold) at Art Basel, the most prestigious international art fair. In 2013, working closely with the foundation, the Museum of Contemporary Art in Los Angeles presented a show featuring Tom's drawings and collages alongside photographs by Mizer from Physique Pictorial. The exhibition's introductory text described Tom of Finland as 'the creator of some of the most iconic and readily recognisable images of post-war homomascularity' (almost certainly marking that word's official debut in the museum).

Alongside its elevation by the art world, Tom's work has increasingly entered mainstream culture. In September of this year, the Finnish postal service released stamps in honour of the artist, one of which features a drawing of a naked man's shapely buttocks and spread legs. According to Sharp, these are 'the first homoerotic postage stamps in the world'. The nomination of Tom for this honour was made by the foundation, which also worked on a companion show, currently on display at the Finnish Postal Museum in Tampere. Titled 'Sealed with a Secret: Correspondence of Tom of Finland', the show mines the artist's trove of letters and photographs to chart his life and work.

UNTITLED PREPARATORY DRAWING, 1987

In honour of the artist, the Finnish postal service recently released 'the first homoerotic postage stamps in the world'

Tom's influence extends not only to other erotic artists but also to the development of gay culture across the second half of the 20th century. His drawings have inspired countless viewers not just to hit the gym or don a biker cap but also to imagine an alternative version of homosexuality. As Sharp puts it, 'when Tom's work first appeared in the 1950s, it defied the dominant image of gay men as sissies, fairies and pansies'. Tom's drawings offered a 'homo-masculine' ideal that spoke not only to the desires but also to the personal aspirations of his viewing audience. Some admirers of Tom's art even had their trousers tailored to fit more like those of the men in the drawings, then sent photographs of themselves wearing the refashioned attire to the artist. Such photographs may now be found in the correspondence archive held by the foundation.

And yet, what may finally be most inspiring about the Tom of Finland house is the way in which the artist's relentlessly butch aesthetic mingles with quite different styles of décor and domesticity. That aforementioned mirrored phallus (made by the artist Douglas Holtquist) sits beneath an art nouveau crystal chandelier from 1913. A bust of a bearded leatherman in the kitchen turns out, on closer inspection, to be a ceramic jar (the man's biker cap doubles as a removable lid) with a base bearing the inscription 'tuff cookie'. And a quilt spread across a guest room bed features» two male nudes – each intricately composed of geometric patches of blue, white and black fabric – enjoying a moment of shared self-gratification.

Rather than appearing kitsch, such objects might be seen as an example of camp at its most generous. In her 1964 notes on that subject, Susan Sontag wrote that ‘people who share this sensibility are not laughing at the thing they label as “a camp”, they’re enjoying it. Camp is a tender feeling.’

And it was, finally, a feeling of tenderness that seemed most to pervade the house, a tenderness towards art, towards sexuality and towards those seeking to combine the two. A rotating cast of characters lives in the house along with Sharp and Dehner, including artists, volunteers and fellow foundation members. A free-form, communal spirit infuses domestic life there. At the moment, a 22-year-old Vietnamese body modification performance artist known professionally as Miss Daphne Von Rey is in residence there along with an Australian writer-in-residence who is helping prepare an application for the house to be designated a historical-cultural monument (HCM) by the city of Los Angeles. Dehner estimates that some 100 artists and other creative souls have lived in the house at one point or another over the last two decades.

According to Dehner, the Tom of Finland house ‘isn’t just about the pictures [on display]. It’s much more about a headspace, a state of being, a letting go of shame and judgements, and a caring for one another. In this house, anybody can be a Tom’s man.’ ★

FOREWORD

Let's get a shot with the rimming chair, the stocks, and the chaise. We're at 1421 Laveta Terrace in Echo Park, Los Angeles, home to the Tom of Finland Foundation and the men who administer it. The occasion is a photo session for this book, and as usual, the joint is jumping. Photographer Martyn Thompson is checking the light for his next picture. Michael Reynolds, the ingenious creative director, is busily arranging furniture—and trying to ignore the chorus of styling suggestions that has, inevitably, broken out among the assembly of gay bikers, leather-men, artists, and other miscellaneous friends of Tom.

In the alfresco bar/clubhouse, hard by the rimming chair and chaise, a silver-haired gentleman in a crisp white T-shirt and black leather vest is overheard telling a friend, "I just got back from Pebble Beach. My aunt has a house on the eighteenth fairway." Meanwhile, two guys engaged in light codpiece-on-codpiece frottage unexpectedly break out laughing. Then they disappear into one of the more private pavilions arrayed along the terraces of the steeply inclined hillside, affectionately dubbed "Pleasure Park."

Across the way, a shirtless beefcake wearing a leather apron and a tattoo that reads "Tom of Finland" across his well-muscled back is shaving the head of a fetching lad in a rickety barber chair. Another eye-catching figure dressed in a California Highway Patrol uniform asks a group of artists gathered around an easel which of his various leather dog hoods they prefer. The piped-in voices of Edith Piaf, Ella Fitzgerald, Dionne Warwick, and Leslie Gore waft over the scene, their plaintive melodies mixing with the pitter-patter from the pissoir water feature. Welcome to Tom House.

Tucked behind a monumental Eugenia hedge on a street of modest bungalows and apartment houses in the rapidly gentrifying Los Angeles neighborhood of Echo Park is one of the gay world's most idiosyncratic and authentic historical sites. Known officially as Tom House (or the Tom of Finland House), it is the place where the revolutionary Finnish homoerotic artist Touko Laaksonen (1920-1991) lived and worked for much of the last decade of his life.

The gabled Craftsman abode now serves as the headquarters of the Tom of Finland Foundation, containing a vast trove of artworks, correspondence, historical documents, and ephemera. But this is no ordinary shrine to a famous artist, trapped in amber, à la Jackson Pollock's studio in East Hampton or Paul Cézanne's dreamy atelier in Provence. For one thing, there are a lot more cocks: metal cocks and marble cocks, painted cocks and penciled cocks, cock kitchen magnets and cock throw pillows, cock collages and cock homages, black cocks and white cocks—cocks around the clock.

The parade of tumescent penises—the work of homoerotic artists from across the globe, Tom included—transcends mere pornography or kitsch (even if there is no shortage of either). Taken as a whole, the kaleidoscopic array embodies the unapologetically phallogocentric ethos that animates Tom House—an ethos cultivated for nearly four decades by the men who live there.

It's an extraordinary place, equal parts frat pad, utopian collective, art historical archive, sepulcher, community center, and den of iniquity. The character of the house morphs in response to whoever happens to be living there or visiting at any particular time. Some days, that might be a gaggle of art students or gay culture vultures; on other days, it might be a group of like-minded voluptuaries gathered for a sex party. Occasionally, it's all those things at once.

Volker Morlock, a longtime Tom of Finland collector and editor of a 1997 publication of the artist's work, aptly describes the residence as "a house of misfit toys, the last fortress of bohemia in a gay cultural landscape that wants desperately to be boring and well-adjusted."

The ringmaster presiding over this ever-changing circus of homoerotic artistry is Durk Dehner, president and cofounder of the Tom of Finland Foundation, the property's actual owner, and the man perhaps most responsible for reclaiming Tom's legacy from the ghettos of illustration and pornography. As much as the Echo Park abode is Tom's house, it is also Durk's house. Artist Richard Hawkins, who worked there as an office manager for five years after getting his MFA from CalArts in 1988, explains: "People who don't know the history of the place often think that this is the house that Tom of Finland's money built. It's really the house that Durk sacrificed his life for."

On this point, however, Dehner demurs. "It's my house, it's Tom's house, it's everyone's house who wants to be a part of it," he says, sounding a bit like Aunt Belle in Jezebel, as she opens the doors of her gracious Southern plantation: "My dear, Halcyon belongs to its guests."

Born in Calgary, Dehner seems to have been training for his role as keeper of Tom's flame from a very young age. He says that he was aware of his sexuality when he was five and that he began exploring men's bathrooms by age nine. He also recalls hanging out at local motorcycle shops, "polishing bikes and fetching sodas—anything to get a ride."

Decamping from Canada when he was 20, Dehner's peregrinations took him far and wide, from Los Angeles and New York to Uruguay and Hawaii. Evidence of his adventure-filled life can be found throughout Tom House. There are signed photos by Liza Minnelli and Grace Jones, two of Dehner's clients in the years he worked as a body therapist for a galaxy of high-profile personalities, including Rock Hudson; model shots of Dehner taken by Bruce Weber in New York in the mid-1970s; original Tom of Finland portraits consecrating Dehner's face and physique; and, in the kitchen, a crayon drawing by his granddaughter (he fathered a son when he was 16).

Dehner dates his Tom epiphany to 1976, when he saw one of the artist's typically hyper-charged, hyper-masculine images—Tom called them his "dirty drawings"—on an advertisement for a motorcycle club hanging in the Spike, a popular New York leather bar. "It was so powerful and seductive that it cast a spell over me. It moved me like nothing I'd ever seen," Dehner says.

Within days, Dehner got Tom's address in Helsinki from Dorn Orejudos (aka Etienne), the house artist at photographer Lou Thomas's Manhattan-based atelier of gay erotica, Target Studios.

Dehner initiated his correspondence with a fan letter, and when Tom spied the photographs Bruce Weber had taken of his admirer in After Dark magazine, his interest was piqued. The two finally met in the spring of 1978, when Dehner offered to host Tom on his first trip to America, which revolved around back-to-back exhibitions at Fey-Way Studios in San Francisco and Eons in L.A. The opening at Fey-Way—a gallery of gay art founded by Robert Opel, the man who famously streaked the Academy Awards in 1974—attracted a host of Tom aficionados, including Orejudos and photographer Robert Mapplethorpe. When they returned to L.A. for the presentation at Eons, Tom stayed with Dehner and his partner, George Rauch, in the Spanish-style house they rented in Silver Lake.

Tom was apparently smitten—both with Dehner and the sexually liberated milieu in which he flourished. The artist and his protege—Tom was 58 and Durk 28 at the time of their meeting—reconnected in New York in the fall of 1978 for a show Dehner had arranged at Stompers, composer Louis Weingarden's West Village boot shop-cum-gallery. By the time Tom returned to L.A. in late 1979, Dehner had pooled his resources with his current lover, his ex-lover, and his ex-lover's lover to purchase the house on Laveta Terrace. If that sounds like a set-up for a sexy sitcom, the truth is not far off—the place proved to be the perfect backdrop for romantic round robins and gay fellowship.

Completed in 1912, the capacious but timeworn dwelling retained a few vestiges of its Craftsman roots—notably, its dark oak paneling, sliding doors, and staircase—as well as vague hints of the Art Nouveau influence that had migrated from Europe at roughly the same time. In addition to ample outdoor space, the house possessed a partly finished cellar, which the new occupants quickly painted black and outfitted with a sling, leather gear, and other essentials of a proper gay dungeon. Dehner recalls a comic episode that occurred some years later, when a Maytag repairman descended into the cellar to fix the washing machine that was located, conveniently, near the dungeon's various apparatus: "I heard a scream and then saw the guy flee in horror. He didn't come back."

Sex naturally played a big part in the social life of the defiantly polygamous household, but other, less visceral forms of brotherly love set the overriding tone for the home. "There was always lots of activity and people. This was a place where we could simply be ourselves, a place without shame or judgment. It had a spiritual dimension," Dehner explains.

Underscoring the atmosphere of a butch hippie commune, a few members of the core circle actually adopted the same last name, Dehner, which they appropriated from a venerable Nebraska-based boot maker. Durk Dehner, who was born John Jonathan, Jr., also changed his forename to perpetuate a vivid adolescent fantasy. When he was 14, he stole a pair of sunglasses from a 1956 Ford he stumbled upon in a Vancouver park. "The name Durk was scratched on the side of the sunglasses, and I thought that sounded incredibly hot," he recalls. "I never saw the owner, but I must have jerked off a thousand times to the image in my head."

The Dehner Brotherhood, as it was known, included the four original occupants of the house—Durk's then ex-partner George Rauch became Butch Dehner—along with a circle of like-minded friends and lovers, including Tom. In 1980, the artist returned to Laveta Terrace, this time with his partner of many years, Veli Mäkinen. "Veli was very cool and reserved, like so many Finns," Dehner recalls, "but he ultimately gave his blessing to the business relationship I was developing with Tom. He knew Tom had been burned before, but he felt I could be trusted."

Following Mäkinen's death from cancer the following year, Tom began spending more and more time in L.A., eventually remaining in the U.S. for six months of the year, the maximum time afforded by his visa. Dehner describes the early years of Tom's residency as a giddy honeymoon. On road trips and bar visits, Dehner presented Tom, appropriately, as gay royalty. "He got to be young again in L.A.," Dehner says. "When I took him out to clubs, he saw firsthand that all the work he'd done in obscurity for so long had really taken hold. It made him happy to see all these young, sexy guys embracing the aesthetic he worked so hard to perfect."

In 1980, Tom and Dehner cofounded the Tom of Finland Company, effectively wresting control over the production and distribution of Tom's work in the U.S. from the unscrupulous printers and vendors who for years trafficked in pirated reproductions of inferior quality, with no royalties paid to the artist whatsoever. That issue, which had dogged Tom for decades, was a frequent subject in the letters he exchanged with Dehner early in their acquaintance. "Looking back to the ending year, it has been one of the most depressing and difficult in my life. Once again I found out, that I am the loser, damn naive idealist," Tom wrote in a letter dated December 31, 1980, discussing an exhibition at New York's Robert Samuel Gallery. Not only had the gallery failed to pay Tom for works purchased by collectors, it also produced and sold a wholly unauthorized set of Tom of Finland greeting cards.

That type of blatant exploitation with apparent impunity made Dehner's bold ideas for a self-sustaining Tom of Finland business enterprise all the more attractive. "What I wanted for Tom was empowerment—the same thing he had given to so many gay brothers. He was a seminal figure in gay history, but because of the nature of his work, he hadn't been given the respect and recognition he deserved," Dehner explains.

The Tom of Finland Company began by producing calendars, prints, and, most notably, a new installment in Tom's landmark Kake graphic novel series, which focused on the adventures of the titular protagonist, a leather-clad Adonis with an insatiable appetite for raunchy man-sex. Kake in the Wild West—Tom's first story fully executed in the U.S.—captured the artist's fascination with the outlaw spirit of the American West, graphically displayed in a saloon stocked with randy cowpokes eager for action.

When Tom was in L.A., he drew every day in his attic bedroom. He would have coffee each morning on one of the garden's lower terraces, then sequester himself for hours at his desk before coming down for lunch. "He needed two things to work—isolation and cigarettes," Dehner says. "The smoke was a kind of dreamy intoxicant, and as for the privacy, he once told me that he had to have a hard-on to produce a really great drawing. When the door was closed, he was not to be disturbed."

Today, Tom's room remains largely unchanged from the time of his residency. As one might expect, there is an array of personal memorabilia on display: his officer's uniform from World War 11 bearing the medal presented to him while he served as a second lieutenant in the Finnish Army; leather boots; containers filled with pencils, markers, and brushes; a well-traveled leather suitcase; and a framed sheet of music composed by the artist, who had studied at the Sibelius Academy in Helsinki after the war.

The decidedly unpretentious room also features an assortment of Tom of Finland merchandise produced at various points during the artist's lifetime and afterward. There are racks of clothing—flannel shirts, leather jackets, and pants, all bearing Tom's imagery—from the namesake apparel line designed by Gary Robinson and David Johnson from 1996 to 2002. The bed Tom slept on is now covered in Tom-themed sheets and pillowcases fabricated, more recently, by the Finnish home goods company Finlayson. And mingling among the faded postcards and family photographs displayed on a bookcase is an articulated Tom of Finland action figure with interchangeable feet, hands, and penises, both cut and uncut—think of it as Mr. Potato Dick.

As the business of the Tom of Finland Company at long last brought a measure of financial stability, Tom and Dehner turned their attentions to Tom's legacy. In 1984, they established the nonprofit Tom of Finland Foundation with the express purpose of documenting and preserving the artist's vast archive, much of which Tom brought from Finland on his yearly trips. However, in 1986, with the AIDS pandemic showing no signs of abating, the Foundation widened its purview and began accepting the work of other homoerotic artists. "We took in collections that had no place to go because of the stigma attached to the subject matter. The artists' families normally didn't want it, museums and institutions didn't want it, and there was no viable commercial market," Dehner says.

During the bleakest years of the AIDS crisis, Tom House hosted roughly 50 memorial ceremonies by Dehner's account. Many of the artworks that now blanket the walls and ceilings of the residence exude a palpable sense of loss, but their very existence represents the triumph of memory and celebration over the bitter ravages of disease. Were it not for the Foundation, the names of many of these artists might easily have been lost to history. Instead, their creations helped define—and continue to perpetuate—the vital, sex-positive spirit that animates Tom House.

The sheer volume of material that flooded into the house over the years created serious challenges for the Foundation's tiny staff and volunteer corps, which was already struggling to organize and catalog not only Tom's archive of drawings but also a mountain of correspondence, vintage magazines, press clippings, bills of sale, and countless other historical artifacts. All of this material is collected in endless boxes, binders, portfolios, and storage containers crammed into every possible nook and cranny of the house. The treasures of the collection are housed in a safe in a repurposed refrigerated cargo container in the back of the house.

Despite the herculean efforts required to bring order to its vast holdings—an ongoing and seemingly endless process—the Foundation has, in the years after Tom's death, accomplished great things. Dehner and S. R. Sharp, vice president of the Foundation and a full-time resident of Tom House since 2008, regularly host an ambitious schedule of fundraisers, dinner parties, live drawing classes, solo and group art exhibitions, symposia, and community meetings—all in addition to the House's ongoing mission to provide a refuge for at-risk youth and struggling artists.

"The timbre of the events shifts from academic to festive to raunchy," explains Sharp, a former municipal gallery manager who came to Hollywood and worked on the moralizing television drama 7th Heaven for years before the show ended in 2007. Sharp recalls a particularly memorable visit from a group assisting the Foundation in utilizing technology as a means of disseminating information to the widest possible audience. "There was a potentially awkward moment when I was taking the librarians through the house. We were walking by a cheap bust of David and I noticed a dried-up, used condom nestled in his curls," he remembers.

The Los Angeles Band of Brothers, a self-described "mentoring and fraternal organization" made up of title holders who have competed in the Mr. Los Angeles Leather Contest, holds monthly meetings (and an annual sex party) at Tom House, underscoring the fundamental connection between Tom's artwork and the leather community. LABB member Shad Cruz explains that leather is the common denominator for a wide-ranging group of fetishists whose interests extend to sports gear, latex, neoprene, and fur. "It's an identifier, a way of signaling that you're into risqué sex," he says. "Leather is the fabric of our lives."

Marc Bellenger, who holds the title of Mr. Long Beach Leather 2013, moved into the house in late 2014, supporting the Foundation's work with responsibilities that range from "fundraising to changing the toilet paper," he says. He likens LABB's summertime "play party for men" to an exclusive event at the Scientology Celebrity Centre in Los Feliz. "The screens go up, no one can see in, the music comes on, and then the fun starts," he says.

Beyond hosting librarians and leathermen, the Foundation has produced 25 Tom of Finland Art Fairs at different venues in Los Angeles and New York since 1995, helping to build an extensive network of artists and collectors. It also sponsors a biennial emerging artist competition and an artist-in-residence program. Michael Kirwan, whose erotic imagery celebrates everyday guys as sex gods, became the first visiting artist by default: in 2005, when he came to Tom House to mount his first solo exhibition, a hurricane destroyed his apartment in Fort Lauderdale. Dehner invited him to stay at the house for whatever length of time he needed to regroup, and Kirwan never returned to Florida.

Of course, the Foundation has been indefatigable in pursuing its original mission to promote Tom's work and see it recognized as a revolutionary force in the history of 20th-century art, culture, and gay politics. Over the years, Dehner has found many art-world allies with progressive sensibilities that allowed them to see Tom's work as something beyond mere illustration or pornography. Artist Richard Hawkins has remained a faithful friend and eminence grise. Hudson, the prescient, mononymous force behind New York's Feature gallery, began exhibiting Tom's drawings in 1988 and was the first gallerist to acknowledge the importance of Tom's preparatory sketches and collages. Artist Nayland Blake penned a wide-ranging "appreciation" of Tom's work—including poignant commentary on Tom's representation of black men and his use of Nazi imagery—in the Fall 1988 issue of Outlook. Richard Marshall, the adventurous Whitney Museum curator and art advisor, wrote the essay for the catalog of the third retrospective of Tom's work, published by the Foundation in 1997.

Los Angeles gallery owner David Kordansky, who represents the work of Tom of Finland, has become a clarion voice in promoting a wider appreciation of Tom's oeuvre. "The work has not yet been subjected to the kind of criticality and scholarship that it merits. It's so much more than a garnish for West Hollywood coffee tables," he insists. "There's a politic involved, and it's pretty fucking radical." Kordansky is particularly eloquent on the subject of Tom's preparatory drawings: "They are the central station of his desire and the arena in which he exercised his imagination. You can see Tom's mind and libido rendered through his hand."

Kordansky is equally enthusiastic about Tom's collages (or "reference pages," as the artist called them), which combine imagery of men lifted from both mainstream publications and illicit gay magazines along with Tom's own photography.

Tom's sketches and collages featured heavily in Tom of Finland: The Pleasure of Play, an exhibition that opened at New York's Artists Space in June 2015. That show was, at the time, the most comprehensive survey of Tom's work ever mounted, marking a milestone in the quest for institutional recognition.

Thankfully, Tom got a small taste of the acclaim that was to come before he succumbed to emphysema in Helsinki in 1991. The year before, he was honored in his homeland by the Finnish Comics Society, and mere weeks before his death, he saw a screening of the as-yet-unreleased Finnish documentary Daddy and the Muscle Academy, which paid tribute to the artist in a series of interviews and curious tableaux vivants intercut with flashing images of Tom's drawings. The artist also lived just long enough to learn that his "dirty drawings" had made their way into the Whitney Museum's Biennial of 1991, where they rubbed shoulders with the work of Jasper Johns, Roy Lichtenstein, Mike Kelley, Cindy Sherman, and David Wojnarowicz.

Today, the work of the Foundation continues apace while the maverick spirit of Tom House remains happily undiluted. The Foundation is currently going through the process of registering the property as an official Los Angeles Historic-Cultural Monument, and the level of activity and energy has only accelerated as Tom's work reaches an ever-expanding global audience. The house is rife with evidence of triumphs great and small—from numerous museum requests to an increasingly varied array of Tom-themed merchandise. The Foundation has recently brokered agreements for a collection of high-end Tom of Finland carpets produced by the Swedish rug maker Henzel Studio, as well as a Tom-branded line of "pleasure tools" that encompasses lubricants, restraints, nipple clamps, an array of insertables, and a collector's edition dildo modeled on Kake's famous cock—the La Jaconde of the dildo world.

Like Torahs to the Jews, dildos are sacred objects at Tom House—one cannot simply throw them out with the garbage when they become old and worn. In the sanctum sanctorum of the dungeon, used dildos mingle with assorted chains, nooses, dog collars, cock rings, shackles, hoods, altars, offering cups, and the odd bust of Hitler. A postcard mounted on a wall bears the irresistible message "I love the smell of manhole in the morning." Here as throughout Tom House, humor coexists with raw sexuality, bonhomie with passion, and quotidian tchotchkes with masterpieces of erotica.

On the day Dehner led me on a tour of the musky basement lair, NPR news was playing on the loudspeakers, striking a note that would seem discordant were it not for the genial, affectionate air that pervades even the darkest corners of the home. At Tom House, everyone is welcome, everyone is accepted, and all things considered.

LAICA donors. While the controversy in Los Angeles quickly faded, an exhibition of his work in 1989 that included photographs from "X Portfolio" resulted in museums and curators charged with obscenity.¹⁷⁴ Although Mapplethorpe is indelibly a New York artist, much of his life's work is in Los Angeles at the J. Paul Getty Museum and Los Angeles County Museum of Art.

Artists have also used the medium of photography to chronicle LGBT culture for themselves as well as for the larger society. Anthony Friedkin is a Los Angeles native who, at the young age of 19, began chronicling gay life in San Francisco and Los Angeles in his "The Gay Essay" photographic project.¹⁷⁵ Between 1969 and 1973, Friedkin produced dozens of black and white images as part of his essay, which is now considered one of the most extensive and important historical records of the gay community during the period.¹⁷⁶ The images were first shown in Europe and Asia due to the attitude towards the subject matter in the United States at the time, but have since been displayed and published worldwide. His work is also found in major art collections such as the New York Modern Museum of Art and the J. Paul Getty Museum.¹⁷⁷ Friedkin completed subsequent photo essays that were equally as poignant, including the "Beverly Hills Essay," "The Hollywood Series," "California Prisons," and "Los Angeles." He is still living and working in the Los Angeles area.

Erotic Artists

While magazines such as Physique Pictorial could be sold on newsstands under the pretext that they promoted physical fitness, an underground market developed for far more explicit imagery. The leader in gay erotica was the artist known as Tom of Finland. Born Touko Laaksonen in 1920, he was raised in a small town in Finland and eventually established Los Angeles as his part-time home. Growing up, he was intrigued by the masculine figures—such as farmers and loggers—that surrounded his countryside home. He took an interest in art and music at an early age, and went on to attend an art school in Helsinki to study advertising. During his studies, World War II broke out, and he was conscripted to the Finnish Army; during his time as a lieutenant he had his first sexual encounters with other enlisted men, which would inspire much of his artwork. After the war he returned to art school and worked as a freelance designer in advertising, and piano player for local cafes.¹⁷⁸

Word of his artwork got out, and a friend convinced Touko to submit samples to Physique Pictorial in 1957. Erring on the side of caution, he submitted his work under the name "Tom," and when it was credited in the spring issue of the magazine as "Tom of Finland," his pseudonym was coined. Demand for his work grew, and he was eventually able to quit design work and give "Tom of Finland" his undivided attention. His first exhibition was in 1973 in Hamburg, Germany; the exhibit was so popular, all but one of his pieces were stolen. He was hesitant to put on another show after the experience, but in 1978 he had his second exhibition in Los Angeles, which led to many more and frequent trips to the United States. Eventually, he was spending almost as much time in Echo Park as he did Finland, until his death in 1991.¹⁷⁹

The Tom of Finland Foundation, which he founded in 1984, was formed to catalog his own work as well as to provide a "safe haven" for similar artwork. The foundation seeks to protect erotic art from discrimination by presenting it within the appropriate context, so it can be appreciated and acknowledged free from the opposition that its subject matter might cause. The foundation is housed in the Echo Park Craftsman that Tom called his home away from home.¹⁸⁰

Lesbians in the Feminist Art Movement

Even in the liberal art community, female artists (both straight and un-straight) struggled for recognition in a male-dominated world. Although women played leadership roles at ONE Magazine, they longed for separate spaces and organizations from men. Lesbians were beginning to wonder if they had more in common with the feminist movement than the gay liberation movement. In Los Angeles, one of the most compelling examples of the attempt to create a lesbian space within the context of the feminist art movement was the creation of The Woman's Building.¹⁸¹

In the early 1970s, three women working at the California Institute of the Arts were frustrated with the art programs offered at the school. Judy Chicago, Arlene Raven, and Sheila de Bretteville formed an independent women's art school that they called the Feminist Studio Workshop (FSW). The earliest classes were held in Bretteville's house but by 1973 they had enough students to lease room in the two-story building that once housed the Chouinard Art Institute. They would call their new facility The Woman's Building. They added more female artists to the faculty and shared the space with other female-operated organizations such as the National Organization of Women and the Associated Feminist Press.¹⁸² Although The Woman's Building was first and foremost a feminist organization, it was a supportive environment that encouraged artistic expression and personal growth, and a place where many female artists came out as lesbians.¹⁸³

In 1977, the FSW began one of their biggest projects, the Lesbian Art Project (LAP). LAP sought to redefine lesbian culture and promote a more glamorous and less "somber" self-image through social events, salons, and art shows. These events ran through 1979. The FSW's next large-scale project was the Great American Lesbian Art Project (GALAS) beginning in 1980. During GALAS, the women of the FSW discussed the current state of lesbian art while holding simultaneous exhibitions across the United States, ranging from full-blown museum galleries to underground shows in private venues. Photographs of the shows were collected in Los Angeles, converted to slides and submitted to four LGBT archives. The project sought to increase the visibility of lesbian artists and promote a dialogue about the feminist and lesbian communities.¹⁸⁴ GALAS was addressed in the mainstream arts media in Los Angeles, and was inclusive of lesbians of color, a portion of the community that had, until then, been largely overlooked and hesitant to participate for fear of discrimination.¹⁸⁵

Fine Artists

The line between commercial and fine art has always been blurry, especially as each has influenced the other during the 20th century. While commercial art is created on-demand by a company and is usually intended for mass exposure, fine art is created primarily for aesthetics purposes. Many of the most important American fine artists of the 20th century have been gay, lesbian, bisexual, or transgender persons, and during the 1960s and 1970s they became increasingly visible. In some cases, their sexual orientation or gender identity had no apparent influence over the content of their work, while in other cases it was a constant and clear presence.

David Hockney, one of the most acclaimed artists of the late 20th century, is British, but much of his work is inspired by Los Angeles, where he has lived off and on since 1964. Unlike other openly gay artists such as Andy Warhol and Ellsworth Kelly, Hockney candidly explored the nature of same-sex attraction in his portraiture. It should be noted that during the 1960s, the height Pop Art and Abstract Expressionism, figurative art was considered unfashionable. Thus, the abstract tradition in which most artists were working at the time did not lend itself to overt expressions or depictions of same-sex attraction and sexuality.

Hockney's "We Two Boys Together Clinging" (1961) is a rare example inspired by the Walt Whitman poem.

While Hockney was associated with the British Pop Art movement, a visit to Los Angeles inspired him to make a series of paintings of swimming pools in a highly realistic style. In Los Angeles, he began to paint portraits of his friends and acquaintances, including Christopher Isherwood and Don Bachardy. Hockney rented a house in Nichols Canyon and later bought the property and added a studio. He now spends most of his time in England.

Don Bachardy is arguably L.A.'s most celebrated portrait painter. Working primarily with acrylics and watercolors, his style is quasi-abstract. He was born in Los Angeles in 1934, and trained at the Chouinard Art Institute (which, coincidentally, would later become The Woman's Building). His first exhibition was at the Red Fern Gallery in London in 1961. One of his most famous portraits is also one of the least popular, Jerry Brown during his first term as governor of California (1975-1983). Bachardy's painting of Brown boldly broke with the longstanding tradition of gubernatorial portraits that favored realism.

Bachardy is almost as well known for his portraits as for his longtime relationship with author Christopher Isherwood. Though there was a considerable age difference between them, they remained partners for years, living together in their Brentwood home until the death of Isherwood in 1986. The two collaborated on projects, and much of Bachardy's work consists of portraits of Isherwood. In the late 1980s, he painted the portraits of twelve gay rights leaders. Bachardy has been exhibited a number of times in solo art shows across the United States and his work has been published in numerous volumes.¹⁸⁶

While artists such as Hockney and Barchardy worked within the recognized conventions of the contemporary art world, a younger generation of LGBT artists was beginning to move into riskier territory. Visual artists began collaborating with one another as well as poets, musicians, and dancers and broaching more political themes in their work. A group of Mexican American artists with roots in the Chicano movement emerged in Boyle Heights and East Los Angeles in the late 1960s. During this highly politicized period, artists such as Robert Legoretta employed performance art to explore issues of gender, race, and sexual identity. Best known by his performance persona Cyclona, Legoretta began collaborating with Edmundo "Mundo" Meza and Glugio "Gronk" Nicandro on performances including "Caca Roaches Have No Friends" (1969), "La Loca en Laguna, the Liberation of Laguna Beach" (1971), and "Cyclorama" (1972). These highly planned and executed performances, which sometimes used murals as backdrops, were captured by photographs. Gronk was a founding member of the multi-media arts collective ASCO that included Harry Gamboa Jr., Willie Herrón, and Patssi Valdez.¹⁸⁷

With the LGBT artists of the 1950s, 1960s and 1970s paving the way, a vibrant LGBT art community emerged in the 1980s and is still thriving today. In 2011, ONE National Gay & Lesbian Archive, in conjunction with the Getty Foundation put on an exhibit curated by David Frantz and Mia Locks called Cruising the Archive: Queer Art and Culture in Los Angeles, 1945-1980. The exhibit, shown in three parts, was the largest and most comprehensive showing of the ONE Archive's extensive art collection to date.¹⁸⁸

There are no currently designated resources associated with this theme. The following table describes known resources associated with cultural organizations and institutions as well as LGBT persons who were prominent in the visual arts. Tom of Finland Residence

This two-story Craftsman home in Echo Park reflects Los Angeles' contributions to the evolution of erotic art, given its association with noted artist Tom of Finland.

A native of the Finnish countryside, Touko Laaksonen adopted the pseudonym Tom of Finland in 1957, after being credited as such in photographer Bob Mizer's magazine Physique Pictorial. He became a renowned illustrator of gay erotica.

Laaksonen first came to Los Angeles in 1978 to showcase his artwork at an exhibition. The success of the show led him to become a frequent traveler to the region.

He eventually began splitting his time evenly between Finland and Los Angeles, where he lived in this two-story residence he often called his "home away from home."

In 1984, Laaksonen spearheaded the Tom of Finland Foundation here to catalog his work and to provide a safe space for artists facing discrimination and misrepresentation due to the erotic nature of their work.

The organization continues to present erotic art in a curatorial, yet open, environment where the works can be viewed and appreciated for their artistic contributions, free from moral judgment.

HISTORY OF OWNERSHIP, 1421 LAVETA TERRACE, LOS ANGELES

The property at 1421 Laveta Terrace has had relatively few owners over the last 100 years. The first recorded owner was a lawyer, Robert W. Kemp (1873-1922)ⁱ. Kemp bought Lot number twenty one of Sunset Boulevard Heights, paying the amount of ten dollars. It was to be used for “residential purposes with the condition that it not be leased resold to Negro, African or Asiatic races.”ⁱⁱ When Robert Kemp applied for the “erection of frame building, permit #2778”ⁱⁱⁱ, in April of 1911, he listed his address as 824 East Kensington Road, apparently living with his in-laws^{iv}.

In 1906, Robert Kemp married Corda Lillian Weller, daughter of Zachariah and Eliza Weller. Lillian and her family lived in a Queen Anne house at 824 East Kensington Road. Zach Weller who was a hardware merchant with a store, Hoffman & Weller, on Main Street, built the house, which was originally at 401 North Figueroa. However, in 1900, the family vacationed on Catalina Island while the house was moved 3,000 feet north and was wired for electricity, the first house in Angelino Height to do so. The property would stay in the Weller family for the next fifty years and become Historical Landmark, no.223 in 1979^v.

Among the residents of 1421 Laveta Terrace in its early days were the Kemps 3 children: Phyllis (born 1910), Robert (born 1913^{vi}) and Doris (born 1916)^{vii}, Minnie F. Klingaman (a cousin of Lillian whose mother’s maiden name was Klingaman^{viii}). Minnie was a secretary at the J.R. Ott Company.^{ix} Also living there in 1916 were Jas and Lucious Bethune, as gardener and housekeeper.^x By 1920, the “domestic” had changed to 17-year-old Mytle Boardman.^{xi}

After Lillian died in 1926, the property was sold by the executor of her estate, C. E. Listenwalter^{xii}, in 1929 to Antonio and Rosa Lozzi for $11,500^{xiii}. There is a Los Angeles City Directory 1926 listing for an E.A. McGrath, who worked for the Times-Mirror – perhaps a caretaker or such.^{xiv} The Lozzis (or Lozzie or Lozze^{xv}), Italian immigrants with 3 sons and 5 daughters^{xvi}, lived in the house from 1929 until selling it to Gelindo Marrone around 1960. The Reconveyance document signed by Antonio Lozzi seems to indicate that the property was sold in 1956, but not to whom^{xvii}. There is a listing for a Gelindo Marrone and Zaccaria Casillo in the Los Angeles Street Address Directory in March 1960^{xviii}. This has been confirmed by a neighbor, William (Willy) M. Centrone, age 64, who has lived at 1422 Laveta Terrace his entire life, remembers both the Lozzi and Marrone families and that the Marrones moved there about that time.^{xix} Gelindo Marrone applied for an application to “ADD-ALTER-REPAIR-DEMOLISH” 1974 [Included in this application].

Apparently H. Michael and Katherine A. Bishop^{xx} purchased the property between that application for alterations and it being deeded in 1979^{xxi} to Durk Dehner who now owns the property and continues to live there.

RE: Historic-Cultural Monument Nomination of the Tom of Finland House, 1419 -1421 Laveta Terrace

Dear Members of the Cultural Heritage Commission:

I urge you to support the nomination of the Tom of Finland House as a Historic-Cultural Monument. The application from the Tom of Finland Foundation persuasively shows that the house meets criteria for designation, not only because it is strongly identified with the historic personage of famed gay artist Touko Laaksonen (Tom of Finland) but also because it reflects the cultural and social history of Los Angeles' LGBT community.

The house at 1419 – 1421 Laveta Terrace in L.A.'s Echo Park neighborhood served as the studio and home of Tom of Finland during the last decade of his life, a period in which he still actively produced many culturally important works of homoerotic art. Today, the house continues to serve as a living museum for this major LGBT icon's art. Furthermore, Laaksonen's artworks have also found a place in displays and collections of major museums nationwide.

I am active in community affairs in a geographically small city that has a large commitment to celebrating and respecting diversity. With national attention now directed at preserving sites of importance to LGBT history, I am so pleased to see that Los Angeles – as my much larger neighbor – is paving the way for newer cities like West Hollywood to show appreciation and respect for historic LGBT sites.

Sincerely,

Victor Omelczenko

ARCHITECTURAL DIGEST

THE INTERNATIONAL DESIGN AUTHORITY

May 3, 2016

Office of Historic Resources
Attn: Historic-Cultural Monument Nomination
Department of City Planning
200 North Spring St, Room 559
Los Angeles, CA 90012

To Members of the Cultural Heritage Commission:

I'm reaching out to lend my support to the nomination for Historic-Cultural Monument designation for TOM House (Tom of Finland House), as submitted by Tom of Finland Foundation (ToFF). I feel very strongly that TOM House is well deserving of this important distinction.

I have been in the world of design publishing for more than 30 years. Currently I am the West Coast Editor of Architectural Digest. Prior to that, I was design editor of Conde Nast's House & Garden and editor-in-chief of Interior Design magazine. My writing has also appeared in the New York Times, the Wall Street Journal, Artforum, Vogue, and many other popular and academic journals. Last year, I wrote the essay that appeared in the book TOM House: Tom of Finland in Los Angeles (Rizzoli).

In the past two decades, the artist Tom of Finland has been recognized as one of most important forces in the evolution of gay culture in the 20th century. His artwork was nothing short of revolutionary, presenting a vision of unabashed gay pride and self-awareness that profoundly influenced untold numbers of gay men across the globe. In Los Angeles, where Tom spent the greater part of the last decade of his life, the artist found fertile ground to cultivate a portrait of modern gay life untethered from antiquated stereotypes and prejudices. Perched in his attic studio on Laveta Terrace in Echo Park, he synthesized the creative ferment and progressive spirit he found in L.A. and used them to articulate a view of gay life full of hope, freedom, and love.

In the two years I spent at TOM House researching the essay for the book, I found one of the most authentic, historically significant preserves of modern gay culture I have ever encountered. It's not merely a quaint relic of an earlier era of gay history. TOM House is a living, breathing entity, a place that welcomes visitors from around the world, and a repository of artwork and ephemera critical to the ongoing work of social, political, and art historians. I cannot overstate its import and meaning. TOM House is a genuine treasure—and a feather in the cap of L.A.'s storied past, present and future.

Kind regards,

Mayer Rus

To Members of the Cultural Heritage Commission:

I am writing in support of the initiative to nominate TOM House (Tom of Finland House) for Historic-Cultural Monument designation as led by the Tom of Finland Foundation (ToFF).

TOM House was the home and workplace of Tom of Finland, who is considered one of the most influential homoerotic artists of the 20th century. Tom of Finland's work is famed throughout the world for revolutionizing the gay world's self-image, where Tom's art consciously celebrated gay masculinity and promoted positive sexuality. Tom of Finland's legacy as a major LGBT icon and one of the most renowned creators of homoerotic imagery remains as strong as ever with a permanent display in the New York Museum of Modern Art and a place in the collections of numerous art museums, including the Art Institute of Chicago, the Los Angeles Museum of Contemporary Art, and the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art.

Many of Tom of Finland's historically and culturally important works were produced in TOM House, which served as his studio and home for the last ten years of his life. Today, TOM House also serves as a creative hub, prompting constant conversation about the merits of highlighting masculinity in homoerotic art.

The City of West Hollywood is known globally as one of the most outspoken advocates for the rights of LGBT people. 30 years since its founding, the City still maintains its core value of respect and support for people by celebrating diversity and promoting mutual respect, courtesy, and thoughtfulness toward all individuals. Tom of Finland's work on behalf of the LGBT community parallels this core value, where Tom of Finland promoted respect for diversity and a body-positive representation of gay men in his work.

As such, I recognize the historic and cultural significance of TOM House and fully support TOM House's nomination for Historic-Cultural Monument designation.

To Members of the Cultural Heritage Commission:

As Mayor Pro-Tempore of the City of West Hollywood, I am writing in support of the initiative to nominate TOM House (Tom of Finland House) for Historic-Cultural Monument designation as led by the Tom of Finland Foundation (ToFF).

TOM House was the home and workplace of Tom of Finland, who is considered one of the most influential homoerotic artists of the 20th century. Tom of Finland's work is famed throughout the world for revolutionizing the gay world's self-image, where Tom's art consciously celebrated gay masculinity and promoted positive sexuality. Tom of Finland's legacy as a major LGBT icon and one of the most renowned creators of homoerotic imagery remains as strong as ever with a permanent display in the New York Museum of Modern Art and a place in the collections of numerous art museums, including the Art Institute of Chicago, the Los Angeles Museum of Contemporary Art, and the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art.

Many of Tom of Finland's historically and culturally important works were produced in TOM House, which served as his studio and home for the last ten years of his life. Today, TOM House also serves as a creative hub, prompting constant conversation about the merits of highlighting masculinity in homoerotic art.

The City of West Hollywood is known globally as one of the most outspoken advocates for the rights of LGBT people. 30 years since its founding, the City still maintains its core value of respect and support for people by celebrating diversity and promoting mutual respect, courtesy, and thoughtfulness toward all individuals. Tom of Finland's work on behalf of the LGBT community parallels this core value, where Tom of Finland promoted respect for diversity and a body-positive representation of gay men in his work.

As such, I recognize the historic and cultural significance of TOM House and fully support TOM House's nomination for Historic-Cultural Monument designation.

To the Members of the Cultural Heritage Commission:

I am writing to express my enthusiastic support for the nomination of TOM House (Tom of Finland House) to be officially designated as a Historic-Cultural Monument in Los Angeles. As the owner of David Kordansky Gallery, I am proud and humbled to count the legendary Tom of Finland among the artists whom my gallery represents. An internationally renowned draughtsman and cultural icon, his highly influential drawings can be found both in the permanent collection of the Museum of Modern Art, New York, and recently adorning the postage stamps of his native Finland. I consider TOM House an indispensable force in the effort to preserve Tom of Finland's artwork and to share his legacy with audiences both within and outside our city, the artist's adopted home.

TOM House is the site where Touko Laaksonen a.k.a. Tom of Finland lived and worked for most of the last decade of his life and realized his most lasting artistic achievements. Presenting a rare and unique look into both his creative and personal life (his quarters have been preserved since the time of his death), TOM House can best be described as a "living museum" dedicated not only to the preservation of artworks and ephemera related to Tom of Finland – the world's foremost collection of its kind – but also to fostering a community of tolerance, celebration, and free expression for whom his art continues to inspire.

Only in the last few years have art historians and cultural scholars begun to fully appreciate the contributions of queer artists to our shared social history. Regrettably, much of this was lost to bigotry or the erasure that occurred when generations of artists fell victim to the AIDS crisis. Too few families and institutions saw then the importance of the art left behind. Since the 1980's TOM House has been a sanctuary for such materials, and today – along with the neighboring University of Southern California, which maintains one of the largest archives of queer materials in the world – it is one of the greatest resources for research into queer visual culture. Further, TOM House stands as a testament to the progressive and visionary Californian ethos that drew Tom of Finland west and continues to attract people from all over the world.

I hope that you will recognize the undeniable significance of this site and grant it its well-earned designation as a Historic-Cultural Monument in our city.

Office of Historic Resources
Attn: Historic-Cultural Monument Nomination
Department of City Planning

To Members of the Cultural Heritage Commission:

The Echo Park Historical Society would like to offer a letter of support for the nomination of Historic-Cultural Monument designation for TOM House (Tom of Finland House), as submitted by Tom of Finland Foundation (ToFF).

As President of the Echo Park Historical Society, I encourage the preservation of culturally unique buildings, such as TOM House, that are fundamental to the character of this community. The Echo Park Historical Society makes its voice heard on local preservation issues, informing its membership as well as elected leaders and government agencies on pressing items and necessary action to protect and enhance Echo Park's cultural and historic heritage. The Tom of Finland Foundation has been an active member of the community for many years, with activities that include sponsoring events, holding meetings, and encouraging preservation.

Touko Laaksonen (aka Tom of Finland) was one of the most influential homoerotic artists of the 20th century. His drawings not only rocked the boundaries of the gay community of the time but also spread into the straight leather biker clubs of England, Germany and, eventually, the US. Today the Foundation continues in its efforts of educating the public as to the cultural merits of erotic art and in promoting healthier, more tolerant attitudes about sexuality. TOM House offers a safe haven for all erotic art in response to rampant discrimination against art that portrayed sexual behavior or generated a sexual response. Tom of Finland's role as a champion of authentic self-expression is nicely captured in the just published book, Tom House: Tom of Finland in Los Angeles.

Significant cultural aspects to consider:

- Tom lived and worked at TOM House for the last ten years of his life
- TOM House is the operating premises of ToFF, which holds the world's largest collection of Tom's work and of ephemera related to Tom
- TOM House receives visitors from around the world who are interested in Tom and his work

ECHO PARK HISTORICAL SOCIETY

EPHS @ HISTORIC ECHO PARK.ORG

- TOM House has been preserved in homage to Tom. Tom's combined bedroom/studio has original furnishings and possessions belonging to Tom
- At TOM House, Tom continued to produce historically and culturally important work
- These works also reflected the gay male culture of the time – for example, Tom's drawings that contained references to safer sex practices.

The Echo Park Historical Society believes that it is important to foster, preserve, and protect culturally historic buildings within the Echo Park neighborhood. TOM House is part of the rich history that is Echo Park.

Sincerely,

Jim Schneeweis

RE: Tom of Finland House, Historic-Cultural Monument (HCM) nomination

Dear members of the Los Angeles Cultural Heritage Commission:

I am writing on behalf of the Los Angeles Conservancy regarding the Tom of Finland House and the Historic-Cultural Monument (HCM) nomination submitted by the Tom of Finland Foundation. As many of you are aware, greater Los Angeles has long been at the forefront of creating and shaping a collective, yet diverse LGBTQ (lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and questioning and/or queer) identity. The City's outstanding SurveyLA LGBT Context has been extremely helpful in shining the light on this part of our collective history, and so deserving of the Conservancy's 2016 Preservation Award.

Raising the profile, building awareness, and protecting significant LGBTQ places is important, and why the Conservancy recently launched the microsite, "Curating the City: LGBTQ Historic Places in L.A.," in which we feature the Tom of Finland House. This two-story Craftsman home in Echo Park reflects Los Angeles' contributions to the evolution of gay erotic art, given its association with noted artist Touko Laaksonen (Tom of Finland).

Laaksonen adopted the pseudonym "Tom of Finland" in 1957 when he submitted samples to photographer Bob Mizer's magazine Physique Pictorial under the name "Tom." Not only is Laaksonen important to Los Angeles but internationally for his body of work. This house is integrally associated with him and his evolving work over time.

It is critically important for these places and their stories to be fully understood and brought to light. The Los Angeles Conservancy is very pleased to offer our support for this important historic place and we encourage your full consideration of this HCM nomination.

Sincerely,

Adrian Scott Fine

To Members of the Cultural Heritage Commission:

It is with tremendous conviction and a genuine feeling of importance that I am writing this letter in support of the nomination for Historic-Cultural Monument designation for TOM HOUSE (Tom of Finland House), as submitted by Tom of Finland Foundation (ToFF).

My career in publishing has spanned close to three decades. In that time, I have worn a variety of hats- Editor, Producer, Creative Director- to name a few. I currently act as the US Editor for *Wallpaper Magazine (Time Inc.), and in addition contribute regularly to T Magazine (The New York Times), CULTURED, Conde Nast Traveler, GQ, Vogue and WSJ (Wall Street Journal). It has been my honor to work closely with the Foundation over this vast period of time, helping to promote the artistry of the late Finnish master known as Tom of Finland (Touko Valio Laaksonen), as well as showcase the historic home in which he spent the last decade of his life. I have produced editorial portfolios on TOM HOUSE for the likes of OUT, *Wallpaper Magazine, CULTURED, GQ, and T Magazine. Recently, my book, TOM HOUSE: Tom of Finland in Los Angeles, was released by the prominent international publishing house Rizzoli and profiled in Vogue Homme, The Huffington Post and Slate.com. The response to date has been epic- of the initial 4,500 copies printed, close to all have sold and now Rizzoli is currently preparing to print a second edition.

The preservation and declaration of TOM HOUSE as an historic landmark by the City of Los Angeles would be incredibly significant on multitude of levels. Politically, economically and culturally it would be honoring the life and work of the 20th century's greatest homoerotic artist, an artist whose defiant celebration of his culture and sexuality acted as a beacon of light for generations of gay men being persecuted by existing laws of their day, laws set in place to criminalize their lifestyle and very nature. Tom of Finland is without question a modern day LGBTQ hero. And the house acts as an epicenter for the museum-like presentation of his ephemera and archives, not to mention that it also functions as a haven for the preservation and exhibition of countless other 20th and 21st century erotic artists- both living and deceased. What's more, the house has opened its doors not only to the LGBTQ community, but to the greater art world and general public as well- hosting fundraisers, life drawing classes, educational tours and community outreach programs. As a result, TOM HOUSE has come to be known internationally, receiving a steady flow of visitors year-round. It has become an historic pilgrimage site, an LGBTQ Mecca of sorts- a Gay Getty!

Please take to heart the importance of having TOM HOUSE designated as an historic Los Angeles landmark house. Its continued existence and preservation will serve to inform generations of LGBTQ individuals to come of their proud heritage, as well as keep alive the art and memory of one of its fiercest defenders.

Sincerely,

Michael Reynolds

Los Angeles, CA 90012

To Members of the Cultural Heritage Commission:

I strongly support designating the Tom of Finland House (Tom House) as an Historic-Cultural Monument.

The Andy Warhol Foundation for the Visual Arts had the privilege of supporting the widely acclaimed survey of Tom's work at Artists Space in New York last year. Both the exhibition and the underlying scholarly research vividly portrayed the historic importance of this iconic gay pioneer. His work and his career comprise pivotal moments in 20th century gay history, and the fact that he lived and worked in Tom House for a significant portion of his career should be reason enough to grant it monument status. And the continued presence of the Tom of Finland Foundation in Tom House makes such a designation imperative.

I sincerely hope you will give this nomination your most favorable consideration.

Very truly yours,

To Members of the Cultural Heritage Commission:

I am delighted to write this letter in support of the nomination for Historic-Cultural Monument designation for TOM House (the Tom of Finland House), as submitted by Tom of Finland Foundation. I am the Head of Modern & Contemporary Collections at the Getty Research Institute (GRI), and as such I oversee the acquisition of archival artist's materials for the GRI's collections, develop exhibitions and publications, and work on a number of largescale research initiatives, most notably Pacific Standard Time, a citywide collaboration of arts institutions who in 2011-12 joined together to produce more than 70 exhibitions devoted to the art and culture of Southern California.

The Tom of Finland Foundation and TOM House are a vital part of the cultural scene of Los Angeles. In addition to the Foundation's truly significant archive of works and materials by Tom of Finland, the Foundation also holds important research collection documenting the history of gay male erotica, including the work of many, many artists. This collection documents important cultures and subcultures within gay male visual life over several decades in the Twentieth century. This material is important as a part of American cultural history, but it is also exceptionally important within the wider history of art in ways that are only recently beginning to be acknowledged. For instance, the Getty's 2011 publication Pacific Standard Time: Los Angeles Art 1945-1980 contains an essay by art historian Richard Meyer that discusses how magazines such as Physique Pictorial (which featured athletic physique photography with a clear homoerotic subtext, and also included illustration and covers drawn by Tom of Finland) were deeply formative for the artist David Hockney, who is widely acknowledged as one of the greatest living painters today.

One might also look to the work of Robert Mapplethorpe, who endured harsh criticism and censorship during his lifetime and today is considered one of the greatest photographers of the 20th century, with an unprecedented double retrospective currently on view at the both the J. Paul Getty Museum and the Los Angeles County Museum of Art. Neither Mapplethorpe nor Hockney could have ever developed along the lines that they did without the work of Tom of Finland and his contemporaries, who paved the way for fine art to become more directly open to the expression of male beauty and sexuality. Much of this work has been and continues to be unacknowledged, although the work of Tom of Finland continues to gain more and more in stature, with his art collected by major museums around the world, including the Museum of Modern Art in New York.

Both myself and other colleagues at the Getty have visited TOM House and made use of their collections in the pursuit of academic art historical research. They are a wonderful organization, respected and cherished within the arts community and the gay community, well-managed, and with a strong board. The physical site of the house is an absolutely crucial aspect of the Foundation. The notion of “home” is one that was denied to generations of LGBT people, and it is deeply symbolic and significant that TOM House truly is a home, and that the use of all parts of the house to create not only a functioning foundation but also, through the display of its collections, a significant re-invention of what the visual identity of a “home” can and in fact does entail—this is one of the most resonant aspects of the Foundation, and one that goes absolutely to its core.

I deeply hope that the commission will closely consider this nomination. Should you require any additional information from me, please feel free to be in touch directly.

To Members of the Cultural Heritage Commission:

This letter is to reflect my support for the nomination for Historic-Cultural Monument designation for TOM House (Tom of Finland House), as submitted by Tom of Finland Foundation (ToFF). I am the founding partner and creative director at the L.A.-based design firm wHY. Our offices in Los Angeles and New York explore design through our four workshops: Ideas, Buildings, Grounds and Objects as they embody our mission to integrate culture into our everyday. Our work is driven by all forms of art that leave a lasting impression, much like the work of Tom of Finland.

TOM House is a living museum that has immortalized Tom of Finland's influential art in Echo Park. It is a glimpse into the private, domestic world of one of the twentieth century's most revolutionary artist that is responsible for a unique graphical and cultural revolution. Tom's graphic work is an icon of the gay community including the home that displays the once controversial work. This space is more than a museum as it encapsulates a time when art was censored and when California needed a voice for a healthier, more natural way of looking at sexuality. TOM House still serves as a safe place for exploration, investigation and education for safe sex. We need your help making this a permanent cultural icon of Los Angeles and California.

The hope in the letter is to share immense support for the Tom of Finland house to be nominated for the Historic-Cultural Monument designation. The message this house and foundation shares with new generations is monumental to a healthier future here in California.
