SUMMARY

The Tokio Florist/Sakai-Kozawa Residence is a two-story single family residence and private garden located on Hyperion Avenue between Griffith Park Boulevard and Monon Street in the Silver Lake neighborhood of Los Angeles. The subject property was designed in the Craftsman architectural style with Tudor Revival influences by architects John B. Althouse and Daniel T. Althouse. Constructed circa 1911, the residence was moved to its current location in 1929. The subject property is the long-time residence of the Sakai-Kozawa family, who operated their family business, Tokio Florist, at the property from 1960 to 2006.

Despite restrictive immigration and land ownership laws as well as the prevalence of restrictive covenants, the Japanese community in Los Angeles burgeoned during the years before World War II. During this time, Japanese Americans continued to settle in areas outside of Little Tokyo, including the neighborhoods of Los Feliz, Silver Lake, and East Hollywood. Housing, employment, and the development of religious and cultural institutions were among the reasons why Japanese families settled in these neighborhoods. Many Japanese with agricultural and horticultural knowledge and skills found employment in the flower industry. For decades, Japanese American growers, gardeners, and owners of cut-flower businesses and nurseries cultivated Los Angeles's domestic, private, and public landscapes. Between 1917 and 1927 the number of Japanese-operated florist shops grew from 15 to 63. However, de jure and de facto discrimination severely restricted Japanese immigrants and Japanese Americans from owning land and occupying these spaces as residents and business owners, through longstanding Alien Land Laws and racial housing covenants. Despite a number of challenges, the Sakai-Kozawa family's business persisted and served the Silver Lake neighborhood for over forty years.

Irregular in plan, the subject property is of wood-frame construction with stone, wooden clapboard, and stucco cladding and has a low-pitched, cross-gabled roof with exposed rafters and braces in the gables. The primary, west-facing elevation is asymmetrically composed and is characterized by a pair of projecting gables with half-timbering details and a porch that spans the entire facade. The entrance is recessed and consists of a single wood door flanked by two sidelites set within a wooden surround. Fenestration consists of fixed wood windows, single-hung wood windows, multi-lite wood casement windows, and bay windows grouped in various configurations. Interior features include wood paneling, coffered ceilings, wainscoting, crown molding, and built-in cabinetry. The landscaped grounds consist of two primary components: a Japanese garden located in front of the residence that features winding paths, bridges, and water features; and an upper terrace behind the garages that features raised beds for growing flowers, fruits, and vegetables. The subject property also includes a greenhouse, a barn-style two-car garage, and a three-car garage. There is a freestanding pole mounted commercial sign that reads "Tokio Florist" located on the western property line.

Brothers John B. Althouse and Daniel T. Althouse established the Althouse Brothers Real Estate Company by 1900 and specialized in the construction of high-end homes built to owner specifications. In the early 1900s, the company acquired 120 acres in the City of Alhambra for residential development, which they named Ramona Park. Most of the 400 homes built in the subdivision were large two-story Craftsman homes, many of which were built by the Althouse Brothers. The architects also contributed several homes to the West Adams neighborhood, including the Thomas Butler Residence (1911, HCM #625) and the John F. Powers residence (1910, HCM #627).

The property has undergone several alterations over the years that include the relocation of the residence and two-car garage from 326 South Normandie Avenue in 1929; the construction of a concrete wall at the rear of the property in 1939; the construction of a three-car garage in 1947; the addition of a pole mounted sign in 1965; the extension of the canopy, the addition of the Japanese garden, construction of the greenhouse, the addition of a wall at the north side of the porch, and the addition of window awnings in the early 1960s; and the addition of a room off the porch, the addition of window screens, and the replacement of some windows and light fixtures at unknown dates.

The subject property was identified through the citywide historic resources survey, SurveyLA, as eligible for listing under the local historic designation program as the longtime home of Tokio Florist, reflecting the presence of Japanese Americans in Silver Lake beginning in the 1960s.

CRITERIA

The criterion is the Cultural Heritage Ordinance which defines a historical or cultural monument as any site (including significant trees or other plant life located thereon), building or structure of particular historic or cultural significance to the City of Los Angeles if it meets at least one of the following criteria:

1. Is identified with important events of national, state, or local history, or exemplifies significant contributions to the broad cultural, economic or social history of the nation, state, city or community;
2. Is associated with the lives of historic personages important to national, state, city, or local history; or
3. Embodies the distinctive characteristics of a style, type, period, or method of construction; or represents a notable work of a master designer, builder, or architect whose individual genius influenced his or her age.

FINDINGS

Based on the facts set forth in the summary and application, the Commission determines that the application is complete and that the property may be significant enough to warrant further investigation as a potential Historic-Cultural Monument.

Dear Melissa,

On behalf of the Little Tokyo Historical Society and a group of historians and preservationists, I am submitting a Historic Cultural Monument nomination for Tokio Florist, located at 2718 Hyperion Avenue in the Silver Lake neighborhood. From 1960-2006, this site was the long-time location of Tokio Florist as well as the residence of proprietors Yuki Sakai, her daughter Sumi (Sakai) Kozawa and son-in-law Frank Kozawa. The site is representative of the agricultural and horticultural sectors of Los Angeles's commercial and early industrial development. It is also exemplary of a multigenerational Japanese American residence and family-owned and operated floral business. The buildings remain extant and components of the site related to flower growing remain intact in a neighborhood of northeastern Los Angeles where flower farms, stands, and nurseries once dominated the landscape.

Could you provide more information on the timeframe for review once the HCM nomination has been received by OHR? Given the property is zoned R3 and has been marketed as developable land, we are concerned about the potential for lot subdivision, demolition, and/or major alterations to the character-defining features of this important historic and cultural site. In February, the Los Angeles Conservancy, who has been supporting our efforts to prepare this nomination, sent the listing agent a disclosure letter to alert him to the historical and cultural significance of the project. Recently, a realtor representing a client interested in subdividing the lot for a condo development contacted the Conservancy. Staff at the Conservancy informed him that a HCM nomination was being prepared and community members felt strongly about protecting the property.

Sincerely,

Kristen Hayashi

7. WRITTEN STATEMENTS A & B

7A. PROPOSED MONUMENT DESCRIPTION

Site

The Tokio Florist/Sakai-Kozawa Residence is located at 2718 Hyperion Avenue on a neighborhood commercial corridor, north of Griffith Park Boulevard and south of Rowena Avenue. The 1911 two-story Tudor Craftsman residence faces west, toward Hyperion Avenue, and is sited centrally on a half-acre rectangular lot. The residence is relatively isolated from other buildings on the block because it is set back behind a paved parking area and a dense Japanese garden.

The landscaped grounds were designed by Sumi and Frank Kozawa in the 1960s and are composed of two primary components:

- A Japanese garden with rare and mature plantings, located in front of the residence. While the condition of the Japanese garden has deteriorated over time, important character-defining features such as winding paths, bridges, and water features, remain.
- An upper terrace behind the garages where flowers gardens, fruit trees, mature trees, and vegetable gardens were grown and maintained. Today, the irrigation system, raised beds, and various plantings and trees from the period of significance remain.

Clustered at the rear of the residence are an incinerator, greenhouse, two-car garage, and three-car garage, further described below.

- A garbage incinerator stands approximately 8 feet tall and is behind the residence near the northern property line. Composed of iron and clad in stone with a red brick trim, the date of the construction is unknown, although it was likely built after 1929 when the home was moved to the site. Though residential garbage incinerators were banned within city and county limits in 1957, the incinerator was used to seal stems of cut flowers that were sold by the Sakai-Kozawas at Tokio Florist during the period of significance.
- Located directly behind the residence is a wood framed greenhouse built by Frank Kozawa in the 1960s to house plants and ceramics. The single entrance to the structure is centered with windows on each facade to allow for light. The interior features a built-in shelving structure composed of cinder blocks that gradually steps up. The exterior cladding is primarily faced with corrugated fiberglass on the lower portion of the structure as well as the roof, which includes a short awning off the primary facade.
- In 1929, the barn-style two-car garage was relocated to the site along with the residence. It was sited near the northern property line behind the residence and facing south. The structure is built of wood and clad with clapboard and wood shingles. The roof is gabled and features a false dormer. The roof is composed of composite shingles. During the period of significance, the structure was converted to a wood shop/work space by Frank Kozawa, who added shelving units for tools and supplies. The structure is accessed by a barn-style sliding door.

- A three-car garage was constructed on the property in 1949 by the firm of Albert C. Martin & Associates. It was constructed approximately 60 feet from the residence, oriented in the same east-west direction. The structure is constructed of wood with clapboard siding and features a flat roof with composite shingles.
- Located on the western property line near Hyperion is a single pole mounted commercial sign that reads “Tokio Florist,” alerting motorists and pedestrians to the commercial presence on site. The colorful sign rises about two stories in height, is rectangular in shape, and is constructed of plexiglass. The sign appears to be individually eligible for local historic designation as representative of the history of Japanese Americans in Los Angeles and under property types associated with Business and Commerce: Commercial Buildings.

Residence – Exterior

The 1911 Tudor Craftsman residence has an irregular shaped plan and is two stories in height with an attic, basement, and two brick chimneys. The broadly pitched roof spans the width of the house with numerous cross gables projecting to the west and east. The building is composed of a wood frame structure and a variety of cladding materials. The first story exterior features stone and clapboard, while the second story is composed primarily of stucco with half-timbering details and non-original asphalt composite cladding. The residence is an example of Craftsman style with Tudor influences, featuring exposed rafters, triangular braces in the gables, decorative half-timbering, ornamented rakes, and grouped windows with diamond and cross design throughout.

The primary façade faces west toward Hyperion Avenue and is characterized by a pair of dominant projecting gables with half-timbering details and a deep porch that spans the entire facade. The porch features prominent stone and wood columns and has been partially enclosed to the north. An addition off the porch extends out to the front garden; it features windows on each facade. The entrance is recessed and includes a single wood door flanked by two beveled side lights with flower motifs, set within a wooden surround. The door has an irregularly-shaped beveled light and original hardware. A non-original metal security door has been added.

The primary facade has an irregularly-spaced fenestration at the first and second stories, which consist of a three-bay symmetry and central entrance corridor. Two sets of windows at the first story have a three over three configuration with a wide central fixed window flanked by two single-hung windows featuring a small diamond and cross design. This design is repeated on the three upper panes. Both sets of windows feature concrete window sills. The second story fenestration includes a semi-hexagonal bay window, a fixed sash flanked by two side lights, and three single-hung windows. A pair of small windows are located at the attic. With the exception of the windows in the second story central bay, the diamond and cross design are repeated throughout. All of the second story windows have non-original screens. The tripartite window with the fixed sash has a non-original metal awning.

The entrance to the porte-cochere carries the half-timbering and ornamented rake detail of the residence, with an additional dentil pattern near the parapet. Just within the porte-cochere, a large commercial refrigeration unit faces north. Extending beyond it to the east is a non-original wood and corrugated metal awning structure. This structure is held up by cast iron pipes on the north and a sliding door to the east. This indoor/outdoor space functioned as a primary work area for the Tokio Florist business.

At the first story of the south elevation, there is a pair of casement windows on each side of the brick chimney. They are followed by a larger four-paned casement window. Located at the southeastern section is a pair of four-paned casement windows and a casement window above a second (rear) entrance. The door features a glass light in the upper portion. All windows on the first story, with the exception of the windows on the southeastern section, feature the diamond and cross design and have non-original screens. The second story features a single-hung window followed by two small jalousie windows, and a pair of single-hung windows. Located at the southeastern portion of elevation is a pair of casement windows featuring the diamond and cross design.

The east (rear) elevation features a semi-hexagonal bay window with a large fixed central window flanked by two single-hung windows with a diamond and cross design on the first story. Above the fixed central window is a smaller pane with the diamond and cross design. A simple single-hung window follows. From there, the exterior wall jogs out and features three single-hung windows, followed by four four-paned casement windows. On the second story, moving from south to north is a single-hung window followed by a jog and a pair of single-hung windows. The northernmost section of the east elevation has two pair of casement windows with the diamond and cross design.

A pair of four-paned casement windows are followed by a small rectangular-shaped fixed window and a single-hung window are featured on the first story of the north elevation. Following a jog in the elevation, there are three windows; the first and third windows are single-hung and the central window is a small horizontally-shaped stained glass window. All three windows feature concrete window sills. The non-original porch wall is clad in clapboard and features three large six-pane sliding windows. The second story fenestration includes three pairs of single-hung windows with the diamond and cross design. A pair of small windows with the diamond and cross design are located at the attic. With the exception of the attic and porch windows, all windows have non-original screens.

Residence – Interior

The interior of the residence retains its original floor plan and includes four bedrooms, 3.5 baths, formal dining room, family room, living room, breakfast room, sunroom, kitchen, and historic staff quarters. The foyer is accessed from the front entrance and kitchen. The foyer, family room, and living room feature wood paneling, wainscoting, crown molding, wide wood baseboards, and antique return-air grilles. These rooms retain original chandelier lighting fixtures and velvet flocked wallpaper borders. To the north of the foyer is the dining room, which features hardwood floors, a pocket door, and built-in cabinetry with beveled glass doors and a stained glass window.

To the south of the foyer beyond two rectangular pillars is the living room. It features a coffered ceiling and fireplace composed of tile and wood, with a mirror centrally located above the mantel. The family room is accessed from the living room and features a pocket door and built-in cabinetry with glass doors. The foyer, living room, and family room are carpeted. At the east wing of the house are the breakfast room, kitchen, and laundry room. The breakfast room features crown molding and wainscoting. The kitchen retains built-in cabinetry and has updated countertops and lighting features. The breakfast room, kitchen, laundry room, and ½ bathroom feature linoleum floors. Near the rear entrance are a small flight of stairs that lead to the basement. To the west of the kitchen is an additional bedroom and ½ bathroom.

The stairs to the second story are made of wood and complement the interior woodwork. The second story consists of bedrooms, bathrooms, and a sunroom. The bedrooms and the master bathroom all contain wallpaper. With the exception of the bathroom to the south, all bathrooms on the second story retain their original design, fixtures, and finishes, including tile flooring and porcelain clawfoot bathtubs.

7B. STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The site at 2718 Hyperion Avenue is the long-time location of Tokio Florist as well as the residence of proprietors Yuki Sakai, her daughter Sumi (Sakai) Kozawa and son-in-law Frank Kozawa. It is extraordinary for the integrity of its landscaped grounds, buildings, and signage, which uniquely narrate emblematic themes of Los Angeles and Japanese American history and culture. Tokio Florist is representative of the agricultural and horticultural sectors of Los Angeles's commercial and early industrial development. Japanese American families significantly contributed to these industries as well as the region's social milieu and built and natural environments since they began immigrating to the area in the late nineteenth century. For decades, Japanese American growers, gardeners, and owners of cut-flower businesses and nurseries cultivated Los Angeles's domestic, private, and public landscapes. Ironically, though, while they contributed to the aesthetic as well as the economic potential of much of the landscape in the region, dejure and defacto discrimination severely restricted Japanese immigrants and Japanese Americans from owning land and occupying these spaces as residents and business owners, through longstanding Alien Land Laws and racial housing covenants.<sup>1</sup> The longevity and resilience of the Sakai-Kozawa family's Tokio Florist business is significant for the many historical shifts it endured. The Sakai-Kozawa family maintained the business despite multiple challenges, including: legal prohibitions to lease and own land, the Great Depression, the forced removal and subsequent incarceration during World War II, the process of reestablishing their lives and livelihoods during the post-incarceration period also known as resettlement, threats from waves of residential and commercial development in the neighborhood, economic downturns and competition from the increasingly globalized cut-flower industry. Here, the Sakai-Kozawa family's business persisted for over half of the business's life as it weathered the continuous reshaping of the built environment and community life that characterized the historic neighborhoods of Los Feliz, Silver Lake, and Edendale that surrounded it.

The property meets "Historic-Cultural Monument Criteria 1" as it exemplifies significant contributions to the broad cultural, economic, or social history of the nation, state, city, and community. The site at 2718 Hyperion Avenue is exemplary of a multigenerational Japanese American residence and family-owned and operated floral business. The Sakai-Kozawa family operated Tokio Florist at this site from 1960 through 2006, which is the period of significance for the property. The buildings are extant and components of the site related to flower growing remain intact in a neighborhood of northeastern Los Angeles where flower farms, stands, and nurseries once dominated the landscape.<sup>2</sup> Together, the components of this site are historically

<sup>2</sup> Starting in 1917, the Kuromi family leased a large number of acres on Los Feliz Boulevard and established Flower View Gardens. The Ueno family leased land for their adjacent flower farm adjacent to that, and the Sakai-Kozawa farmed flowers and had a shop to the west of both. The Kuromi family likely were instrumental in helping Yuki and her family. Members of all these families also worked for and with one another. Similarly, the Uenos were incarcerated at Manzanar, and the Kuromis at Gila. All had to start over when they returned, and all were displaced in 1962 when Los Feliz Boulevard was developed with housing. Flower View relocated in 1962 to 1801 N. Western Avenue. While Flower View no longer operates (a hardware store occupies the building), the former warehouse or workshop where designers significant for representing the ways in which Japanese Americans contributed to shaping Southern California's cultural, economic, and physical landscapes. SurveyLA's Wholesale Flower Market context statement points out, "Japanese Americans dominated the industry over several generations," yet remaining buildings associated with the wholesale flower industry do not survive with integrity.<sup>3</sup> Yet, Tokio Florist survives with integrity, as a retail cut-flower business with a long-standing history and connection to the wholesale flower industry and floral nurseries led by Japanese Americans and important to the city's economic development. It is among only a few Japanese American retail flower shops that survived for this length of time in situ--exceeded largely by the Westside's O.K. Nursery/Hashimoto Nursery, which in 2013 celebrated 80 years and three generations of ownership at its Sawtelle Boulevard location.<sup>4</sup>

The site of the Tokio Florist also represents the role of gender in the family economy, and a national history of ethnic entrepreneurship. In this case, owners Yuki (Kawakami) Sakai and her daughter Sumi (Sakai) Kozawa worked seven days a week, and were able to cultivate flowers that they also sold on site, while raising a family. These themes are of deep significance not only to California history, but to that of the nation at large, particularly since aspects of gender and the economy—especially how immigrant groups and women of color “made it in America” have not been adequately represented locally, or on the National Register.

2718 Hyperion Avenue has been identified in SurveyLA's Historic Resources Survey Report on the Silver Lake-Echo Park-Elysian Valley Community Plan Area as potentially eligible for listing as a Los Angeles Historic-Cultural Monument (HCM) as the long-time location of Tokio Florist, a flower shop that bears a significant association with the commercial identity of Silver Lake and represents the presence of Asian Americans in Silver Lake.<sup>5</sup> SurveyLA's Japanese Americans in Los Angeles has also identified Tokio Florist as a historically significant commercial building associated with the history of Japanese Americans in Los Angeles.<sup>6</sup>

The property also meets “Historic-Cultural Monument Criteria 3,” as it embodies the distinctive characteristics of a Tudor Craftsman residence and for its association with John B. Althouse and Daniel T. Althouse (Althouse Brothers hereafter), active designer/builders in the City and

Althouse Brothers and 2718 Hyperion Boulevard

The two-story Tudor Craftsman residence, originally located at 326 S. Normandie Avenue, was built in 1911 by the Althouse Brothers for a cost of $9850.<sup>7</sup> City directories indicate that businessman and major Southern California landowner Ortus B. Fuller resided in the home from 1912 to 1922. In 1929, the property was purchased by Dr. Harry Brigham, who moved the residence and its detached garage to 2718 Hyperion Boulevard.

The Althouse Brothers Real Estate Company was well established by 1900 and was specializing in the construction of high-end homes built to owner specifications. In the early 1900s, they acquired 120 acres in the City of Alhambra for residential development, which they named Ramona Park. Most of the 400 homes built in the subdivision were large two-story Craftsman-style homes, many of which were built by the Althouse Brothers.<sup>8</sup>

During this time, the Althouse Brothers were also building distinctive homes in the West Adams neighborhood.<sup>9</sup> Contemporaries of architects Greene and Greene, among the Althouse Brothers work were six homes on Manhattan Place between Venice and Pico.<sup>10</sup> Only two of these homes survive today, the Thomas Butler Henry Residence located at 1400 S. Manhattan Place (HCM #625) and the John F. Powers Residence located at 1547 S. Manhattan Place (HCM #627). Both homes have achieved Historic-Cultural Monument status for their historic and architectural significance. The floor plan and many of the distinctive interior features at 1400 S. Manhattan Place (HCM #625) bear striking resemblance to the Tokio Florist/Sakai-Kozawa Residence.

Japanese Americans in Los Angeles

The history of the Tokio Florist is part of a larger history of Japanese Americans in Los Angeles. As documented in SurveyLA's Japanese Americans in Los Angeles Historic Context:

Between 1869 and 1910, Los Angeles rose to prominence as a destination for Japanese immigrants, becoming home to the largest Issei population in the United States by 1910.<sup>11</sup> The city's expansion in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, combined with its fertile rural environs, made the city attractive to a diverse range of immigrants. The San Francisco earthquake also played a pivotal role in Los Angeles' ultimate dominance over northern California as home to the state's Japanese population....Although Japanese were initially recruited to the U.S. to fill railroad jobs, they quickly began to turn to agricultural pursuits given the fertile ground and favorable climate of Southern California.<sup>12</sup>

In his study of Japanese Americans in the U.S., historian Gene Levine found that two-thirds of Issei men and women reported that their parents were farmers in Japan.<sup>13</sup> In the late 19th century, labor recruiters looking to fill a need for agricultural workers in Hawaii and the mainland concentrated on identifying prospective laborers from prefectures in Japan that were known for agriculture, including Hiroshima, Yamaguchi, Fukuoka, and Kumamoto. With agricultural knowledge and skills honed in Japan, by 1909, two-thirds of California's Japanese population was working on farms.<sup>14</sup> In Los Angeles County, 1901 was recorded as the beginning of Japanese leasing and farming.<sup>15</sup>

In addition to growing produce, Japanese Angelenos were early influencers in the development of the wholesale and retail floral industry.<sup>16</sup> By the 1910s, Japanese Americans had begun to cultivate large-scale flower cultivation in areas such as Wilmington, Harbor City, Venice, Los Feliz and what became West Los Angeles, South Los Angeles, and in the City of Long Beach.<sup>17</sup> As Japanese Americans expanded their flower growing businesses, more organized sales operations replaced what had been an informal system of markets. According to SurveyLA:

In 1912, 54 Issei flower growers started the Southern California Flower Market. The market, known as the Japanese Market, opened at 421 S. Los Angeles Street in 1913. During the 1910s and 1920s, the Market had several locations, and primarily stayed within a few blocks along Wall Street. Japanese men also formed the Southern California Floral Industry Association (not extant) in the 1910s to recruit growers from around Southern California.<sup>18</sup>

For Japanese immigrants involved in agricultural and horticultural pursuits, the passage of California's Alien Land Law in 1913 had a profound impact. The discriminatory law prohibited "aliens ineligible for U.S. citizenship" from owning land or leasing it for more than three years.<sup>19</sup> Immigrants from Japan and other Asian countries were considered ineligible from citizenship due to the Naturalization Law of 1790, a racial basis for citizenship eligibility that persisted until 1952. Although the Alien Land Law did not specifically call out an ethnic group or race, Japanese and other Asian immigrants were the targets of the legislation, which aimed to thwart their ambitions in agriculture and floriculture. In 1920, the Alien Land Law became more stringent in California as legislators passed an amendment that expanded the law to restrict aliens ineligible for citizenship from leasing land and make it more difficult for them to purchase property in the names of their American-born children (a common practice since 1913).<sup>20</sup> It also prohibited stock companies owned by non-citizens from acquiring lands.<sup>21</sup> Though many Japanese continued to illegally lease farmland, an arrangement that put them at the whim of the landowner, as historian Charlotte Brooks explains, the 1920 law "dramatically reduced the number of Japanese in agriculture."<sup>22</sup> According to the SurveyLA's Japanese Americans in Los Angeles, the new legislation resulted in a shift in agricultural employment patterns. "During this period, niche markets of employment included Japanese nurseries, maintenance gardening,

Japanese Americans in Los Feliz/Silver Lake/J-Flats

Despite restrictive immigration and land ownership laws as well as the prevalence of restrictive covenants, the Japanese community in Los Angeles burgeoned during the years before World War II.<sup>24</sup> During this time, Japanese Americans continued to settle in areas outside of Little Tokyo, including the neighborhoods of Los Feliz, Silver Lake, and Madison/J-Flats (now East Hollywood). Housing, employment, and the development of religious and cultural institutions were among the reasons why Japanese settled in these neighborhoods.

In a 1927 study of Japanese in Los Angeles, Koyoshi Uono found that as early as 1905, there were 88 Japanese households in the area tucked between East Hollywood and Silver Lake, historically known as the “flats,” J-Flats, or Madison Avenue. Uono attributed the clustering of Japanese in the area to the building of new houses on the west side of Vermont Avenue and the subsequent employment of Japanese by these new homeowners.

SurveyLA’s Japanese Americans in Los Angeles identified extant intact boarding houses from the pre-WWII period in the Madison/J Flats area at 560 (Joyce Boarding House) and 564 N. Virgil Avenue. The latter was also listed as the Obayashi Employment Agency in the 1939 Sun Year Book.<sup>25</sup> Uono found that the residents of Japanese ancestry in this district were mostly day laborers and gardeners, but others engaged in medicine, restaurants, and marketing. For instance, U.S. Census records indicate Mary Akita (1898-1998), who resided at 513 N. Virgil Street (altered), was one of the first Japanese nurses to practice in Los Angeles.<sup>26</sup> She was instrumental in opening Turner Street Hospital in Little Tokyo (not extant). According to research conducted for the Japanese Hospital City of Los Angeles Historic-Cultural Monument Nomination, Akita turned her home into a maternity ward in the 1920s.

Many Japanese with agricultural and horticultural knowledge and skills found employment in the flower industry. According to Uono, there were 15 Japanese-operated florist shops in 1917 and 63 by 1927 in Los Angeles.<sup>27</sup> This represented the largest ten-year increase of any business type studied. In A Scent of Flowers: The History of the Southern California Flower Market, 1912-2004, Naomi Hirahara documented some of the early Japanese and Japanese American flower growers in the area. Starting in 1917, the Kuromi family leased acreage on Los Feliz Boulevard and established Flower View Gardens, a flower farm and storefront. Hirahara noted, “Known as the area’s sweet pea king, A.H. Kuromi left buckets of the fragrant flowers outside on the curb for local customers, who dutifully left dimes in cans for payment.”<sup>28</sup> The Ueno family leased land adjacent to the Kuromis on Los Feliz Boulevard for their flower farm. In the 1920s, Kodo Muto and Hatsujiro Imai were tending fields in Los Feliz near where Kiichiro Muto (soon to be father-in-law of Kodo, no relation) was cultivating an acre of field carnations and an acre of poinsettia and sweet peas on a farm on Vermont near Los Feliz Boulevard.<sup>29</sup> Among other Japanese families who had small flower shops in the area were the Kawakamis (incidentally, no relation to Yuki Kawakami’s family), Nakaos, Ichinos, and Sakamotos.<sup>30</sup> In 1929, Yuki (Kawakami) Sakai leased land about one mile east of Flower View Gardens and less than 0.2 miles from where her father and brothers had a flower farm in 1920. Yuki’s brother Saichi Kawakami helped her get her flower business up and running, since by this time, Yuki’s husband had died.<sup>31</sup> Members of all these Japanese American flower growing families worked for and with one another, forming a tight knit community defined not only by physical proximity, but by social, economic, and familial ties.

While employment and housing attracted Japanese to the neighborhood, the emergence of religious and cultural institutions played an important role in maintaining community cohesion. In the late 1920s, the Japanese Presbyterian Church of Hollywood (later renamed Christ Presbyterian Church) relocated their congregation to the J-Flats neighborhood after enduring years of anti-Japanese sentiment at their previous location.<sup>32</sup> The congregation purchased three lots and two houses at 4011 Clinton Street, but by 1932 had completed a new building, as the existing buildings were deemed unfit for religious or educational purposes. Among the church’s activities were Sunday School, morning worship, monthly women’s meetings, kindergarten, sewing class, piano, English class, and summer school, all adding to the cultural life of Japanese American families in the community. The congregation endured the upheaval of the wartime incarceration, reforming in the early postwar period. Post-incarceration, the church remained a significant hub for the community. A vibrant youth group which engaged many of the Japanese American youth in the J-Flats neighborhood gathered at the church.

Fujiya Market and a Japanese language school in the neighborhood were additional anchors for the local Japanese American community before and after World War II. Both were located near Virgil and Clinton as early as the 1930s. Well into the 1960s, there was a tight knit group of Japanese American families who lived in the large historic houses along Virgil. The Tsuneoshis, Uyemuras, and Endos were a few of the families that lived on Virgil, close to the cluster of Japanese American businesses that were located in the area of Fujiya Market. They were not too far from Shonien, a non-sectarian Japanese orphanage, also known as the Japanese Children's Home of Southern California.<sup>33</sup> The Shonien relocated from Downtown Los Angeles to five large lots on Redcliff Street in Silver Lake in 1917, where it was initially met with opposition from the mostly white neighbors. Yet it continued to offer relief to Japanese families unable to care for their children, and expanded in the post-World War II period.<sup>34</sup>

City directories support this pattern of settlement in the neighborhood, with the Miyagawa, Hiroto, Fukushima, Nagai, and Kusumoto families among those on Redcliff in the early 1960s. They and others might have been additionally drawn to the neighborhood for the child-care facility the Shonien now offered. The home that the Shigekawa family built in 1942, but couldn't occupy until after their wartime incarceration, was also nearby. When Dr. Sakaye Shigekawa, who was born in the same year as the passage of the 1913 Alien Land Law and whose family in the prewar years lived in the largely African American Central Avenue area due to racial housing restrictions, resumed her robust obstetrics practice in the flats, she moved in to the Silver Lake home on Benton Way in 1948.<sup>35</sup> The hills and streets around her became dotted with other Japanese Americans. Not surprisingly, the Sakai-Kozawa family was well acquainted with Dr. Shigekawa.<sup>36</sup>

Japanese surnames are represented along Hyperion near the site of Tokio Florist by the 1950s and 1960s, as well. In fact, the Sakai-Kozawa family might have known the Hyperion property had been put on the market by the owner, Mrs. Brigham, because Sumi (Sakai) Kozawa got her hair done by Emma Hasegawa, at Hub Beauty Shop, a few doors down, and because they purchased gas from the Japanese-owned gas station at the corner called Suds. ### Historical Background on the Sakai-Kozawa Family and Development of Tokio Florist

Yuki (Kawakami) Sakai’s decision to settle and open a flower shop in the Los Feliz neighborhood of Los Angeles was likely primarily influenced by her family’s deep ties to Los Angeles’s flower industry. For at least a dozen years prior to the establishment of Tokio Florist, members of the Kawakami family worked at Japanese/Japanese American flower farms in Sun Valley. In the 1920 U.S. Federal Census, Yuki’s father, Asakichi Kawakami, her mother, and two brothers Saichi and Kiuye lived in Los Feliz near Vermont and Los Feliz Boulevard, with their employment industry listed as “nursery.” By the late 1920s, Yuki’s father and brothers were cultivating flowers for the wholesale market in Sun Valley, Los Feliz, and in Glendale. At one point during their marriage, Yuki and her husband Masao lived with the Kawakamis at their Sun Valley ranch, and presumably were exposed to the flower industry.

By 1929, recently widowed Yuki (Kawakami) Sakai, with four young daughters and a son to support, opened a flower shop on Los Feliz Boulevard, which she called Tokio Florist. She leased one acre of land from Mrs. William Mead on Los Feliz Boulevard between Hillhurst and Rodney Avenues, where her family grew flowers for the wholesale market on Wall and Seventh as well as for sale to retail customers. The land included a house, which Yuki rented for her family to reside in.<sup>38</sup>

Beginning in the late 1910s, several Japanese businesses arranged leaseholds on Los Feliz Boulevard from the Mead family, one of the largest land owners in the Los Feliz area, despite objections from the Los Feliz Improvement Association (LFIA).<sup>39</sup> For a Japanese American immigrant to be able to lease land in the late 1920s was notable since the California Alien Land Law, first implemented in 1913, became more stringent, placing restrictions on non-citizens leasing and owning land. Barred from naturalization and denied the rights of citizens, Japanese immigrants had to be creative to find ways around this legislation. They also needed what historian Charlotte Brooks calls “accomplices,” like Mead, who was willing to illegally lease plots to them.<sup>40</sup> Japanese flower growers were thus in a precarious position, as they held only month-to-month leases, and could be quickly evicted when the opportunity arose for more lucrative development. For decades the Meads actively protected their rental income and tax exemptions by pushing back against LFIA opposition to both the racial constitution and commercial land use of the Japanese nurseries and cut-flower stands on Los Feliz. Yet, the racial climate was clear by 1943, when the LFIA established a Special Committee on Racial Restrictions. By 1946, the group had gotten property owners to add racial covenants to deeds of 130 tracts in the area, though their efforts were diminished in 1948 when the Supreme Court invalidated such racial restrictions.<sup>41</sup> This was the racial climate of Los Feliz.

Successfully operating the Tokio Florist on Los Feliz Boulevard came, then, against the odds and carried great pressures. Every member of the Sakai family was put to work, cultivating poinsettias, carnations, gladiolas, and ranunculus, pulling bulbs, and keeping the store open seven days a week.<sup>42</sup>

Tokio Florist kept company with other Japanese-established flower farms and stands on Los Feliz Boulevard. From 1917 to 1942, and from 1945 to 1961, the Kuromi family leased land for Flower View Gardens nearby, at 5149 Los Feliz, and the Ueno family cultivated flowers on adjacent property. The families were part of a community network that also extended to the ranches and nurseries in the San Fernando and Imperial Valleys, and to the Downtown Flower Market. They were part of, and their enterprise was patterned on, Japanese development of Southern California's Wholesale Flower Market as a means to coordinate distribution efforts.<sup>43</sup>

Although Tokio Florist opened just ahead of the economic downturn of the Depression, it managed to gain steady business, becoming known as the biggest shop on the Boulevard (according to family). Perhaps it was the shop's location across the street from the Brown Derby at Los Feliz and Hillhurst that brought clientele from the still-deep pockets of Hollywood. The shop's customer base grew to include Greta Garbo, who bought the sweet peas they grew there, Mae West, Cecil DeMille, Bud Cort, Olivia de Havilland, Joan Fontaine, and Earle C. Anthony,

<sup>43</sup> They participated in an ethnically specific pattern of flower cultivation and wholesale that is described in Naomi Hirahara's Scent of Flowers and SurveyLA's Wholesale Flower Market Context Statement in terms of Japanese-only membership of growers around Southern California who sold through the professional organization of the Southern California Flower Market. who would buy a single gardenia every day—an expensive enterprise.<sup>44</sup> One daughter, Miyoko, described their location north of Los Feliz as having a country feel. Customers described the leisurely pace of travel along Los Feliz Boulevard into the 1950s, when you could still pull up to the curb and jump out to pick up an arrangement. They recalled that the shop’s awning seemed to extend over the sidewalk and also talked about the nurseries that extended along Los Feliz Boulevard west to the edge of Griffith Park at Ferndell and northeast into Atwater.<sup>45</sup>

Just as the Sakai family appeared to have weathered the Depression, Japan’s attack on Pearl Harbor changed their lives as well as those of every other Japanese American family on the West Coast. Like other Japanese American families, the Sakais had to settle their business and personal affairs in a short time frame before they were forcibly removed from their communities on the West Coast in the Spring of 1942. The Sakais were able to store many of their belongings from the Tokio Florist at the Kawakami family’s Sun Valley ranch.<sup>46</sup> Their caretaker—a nearby rancher named Mr. Esser—was to look after the ranch.<sup>47</sup> The Tokio Florist, in the meantime, was cared for by another neighbor, Mr. and Mrs. Stone, who also operated a flower shop and sold Christmas trees next door.<sup>48</sup>

The forced removal and subsequent incarceration caused significant distress for the Kawakami-Sakai family. According to War Relocation Authority records, Yuki and her four daughters appear to have been detained separately for a short time. Yuki was first detained at Santa Anita, the temporary assembly center at in Arcadia, CA, a site where many Japanese Angelenos were initially detained. Her daughters Sumio, Etsuko, and Miyoko appeared to have gone straight to Manzanar, one of the more permanent concentration camps. Middle daughter Hisako appears to have arrived at Manzanar separately.<sup>49</sup> Yuki and her daughters were all reunited at Manzanar by

Today, this address is considered part of Sun Valley. This address was once considered part of Roscoe, which is a historical name for Sun Valley. The New Japanese American News 1949 Yearbook and the family considered this address to be part of Sunland. Perhaps the boundaries of Sunland and Sun Valley have shifted over time.

<sup>49</sup> War Relocation Authority, “Roster of Manzanar Residents, 6/1/1942 - 12/31/44.” A handwritten note describing Miyoko Sakai’s “type of original entry” is not legible. 6/1/43 is listed as her date of original entry, which is a year later than her mother and sisters. One reason for the delayed entry into camp could have been health-related. This is often why incarcerated entered camp later than most of their peers.

June 1943. Additionally, Yuki's parents and siblings also were incarcerated at Manzanar. Not all of the family members survived Manzanar. Yuki's mother died on her first day there. She had been frail and bedridden, and due to her poor health and her inability to speak English, friends and family tried not to move her out of Los Angeles. Dr. Thompson, a family friend from the years when Yuki's family grew flowers by his property (at today's Brand estate) in Glendale, assumed care for her. Neighbors reported Mrs. Kawakami's presence in the exclusionary zone to the authorities, who removed her to Manzanar. She died with her family beside her the day after arriving at the concentration camp.<sup>50</sup> For Yuki, losing her mother must have been incredibly devastating, especially after the heartbreak of losing her husband and son--both from automobile-related accidents. Yuki remained committed to her family, choosing to resettle with them after they received indefinite leave from camp.

The Sakais, like many other Japanese American families, returned to Southern California after the West Coast reopened to them on January 2, 1945. Two of Yuki's daughters, Hisako and Etsuko returned to Southern California almost immediately after the exclusionary ban was lifted, settling in Spadra (near Pomona, CA) and Los Angeles, respectively. Yuki, Sumiko, and Miyoko departed Manzanar a few months later on September 1, destined for Roscoe, California where Yuki's relatives, the Kawakamis, had the flower farm at 10091 Helen Avenue prior to incarceration.<sup>51</sup> Yuki and her daughters lived in Sun Valley for several years as they worked to re-establish themselves, which is evidenced by the "Y. Sakai" listing at this Sun Valley address in the 1949 edition of The New Japanese American News, a Japanese American directory published by the Shin Nichi-bei Shinbusha.<sup>52</sup> In the 1952 edition of the directory, Yuki Sakai was listed as residing at 4537 Los Feliz Boulevard, the site of her prewar home and business. Tokio Florist is not listed in this edition, suggesting that the business had not become re-established yet. "Tokyo Florist" appears in the 1955 edition of The New Japanese American News Yearbook at 4555 Los Feliz Blvd. The nearly ten year gap between when Yuki Sakai returned to Southern California post-incarceration and when she reopened the business reflects the immense difficulties that many Japanese Americans faced in restarting their prewar business establishments. This was the case for many, even the Sakais, whose Los Feliz neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Stone, watched over the property during the war. Daughter Miyoko recalled that we "returned to one corner of the lot, and stuck with retail rather than wholesale cultivating and sales,” suggesting the financial challenge in reopening the family’s cut-flower business.<sup>53</sup> Nevertheless, the re-establishment of Tokio Florist was significant, especially in contrast to the tragic experience of many returnees who lost everything in the days leading up to their forced removal in 1942.

In comparison to the prewar period, the number of Japanese American owned businesses declined after the war. The Sakai family was among those who were able to get their business up and running again. They continued their family business in subsequent decades, too, as many other mom-and-pop flower shops were forced out of the business in the 1960s through 1980s, when supermarkets and corporate chains began garnering the lion’s share of the market. Also, affecting the market were federal subsidies to overseas growers, which paved the way for imported flowers from countries where fewer environmental and labor regulations enabled cheaper production and distribution. The other large-scale change in floriculture in Los Angeles came as the result of the changing real estate market, as land leased for flower cultivation began to hold greater value it held for residential development and federal subsidies to overseas growers paved the way for imported flowers from countries where fewer environmental and labor regulations enabled cheaper production and distribution.<sup>54</sup>

In the early 1960s, Tokio Florist and its neighbors were displaced as Los Feliz Boulevard began to be developed with apartment towers as nearly 3,000 units were constructed in the Los Feliz Estates area once comprised of Japanese-operated nurseries. It was the beginning of the end of the Japanese American flower farms and stands in the area, but not for the Tokio Florist, which would reopen less than a mile away.

In 1960, the Sakai-Kozawas put a down payment on the property at 2718 Hyperion Boulevard between Griffith Park Boulevard and Rowena Avenue and began to move their residence and business here.<sup>55</sup> Sumi Kozawa, Yuki’s eldest daughter, described Hyperion as still like the country, with few cars.<sup>56</sup> It was there that Sumi, her husband Frank, her mother Yuki Sakai, and her daughter Susie, would call home for decades to come.

The residence was and remains today isolated from others on the block because it was set back behind a paved area and landscaping.<sup>57</sup> Shortly after acquiring the property, Sumi and Frank Kozawa began to make improvements to the property to facilitate operation of the florist business, which included several outdoor work areas and a Japanese garden in front of their residence. Clustered at the rear of the residence are an incinerator, greenhouse, original barn-style garage, and three-car garage addition, all of which were utilized in the operation of the business. The upper terrace includes fruit trees, mature trees, and historical vegetable and flower fields and gardens. In time, flowers were planted wherever there was open space for both aesthetic reasons, but also to have fresh flowers to sell.

Tokio Florist customers meandered through the Japanese garden that Sumi and Frank Kozawa designed and kept lush with plantings that were often integrated in Sumi's floral designs. Just inside the porte cochere, where their 1920s refrigeration case was located, flowers of many varieties could be found. Once customers made their selection, they made their way up a few steps to the front porch to make their purchase. Beyond the porte cochere was a greenhouse that Frank had built to keep additional plants and ceramics. The expanse of land at the rear of the property held flat ground for growing Iceland poppies, sweet peas, coxcombs, seasonal flowers and was also abundant with fruit trees. Every open space in the front and back of the property was used to grow flowers. This was partly to create an aesthetic, but also to ensure that fresh flowers were always available to sell. Frank converted the older of the two garages at the rear of the property into his workshop. There, he built tools to use in the garden and grounds, and worked on projects related to the business.

The structures and landscaping of the property reflect the operations of working Japanese American flower growers and florists as well as the Sakai-Kozawa customers' preferences. Specific details and plantings included the koi pond and bridge, persimmon trees, and timber bamboo used for New Year's displays, all expressions of the Sakai-Kozawa's cultural heritage and which would have resonated with their Asian American clientele. Sumi and Frank harvested ample foliage and large leafy plants in the Japanese garden and throughout the property for use in arrangements requested for fashion shows, trade shows, and even film shoots when large spaces needed to be decorated. Sumi's keen understanding of her customers' tastes also informed what was in the landscape: "We grow the poppies, champagne poppies. And we have the Canterbury bells, the hybrid delphiniums, sweet peas, flowering quince, and peach blossoms. My customers like casual things from the garden. Odds and ends here and there. They like that."<sup>58</sup>

When the Sakai-Kozawas first moved the family and business to Hyperion, they imagined how they would attract the growing automotive audiences, perhaps influenced by Sunset Boulevard's stretch of Route 66, and drew up plans for a Googie-style modernist storefront and shop façade.<sup>59</sup> They abandoned these plans when their customers said they liked driving in and walking up the lushly landscaped path. Passersby often mistook Tokio Florist for a nursery because of the quantity of plantings visible from the sidewalk, which served as its own form of advertisement to entice people to explore further. Flowers were planted by the Kozawas in every available space--close to the sidewalk, around the base of the sycamore tree (the tree was later singlehandedly removed by Yuki Sakai), beside the paths to the porte cochere--along with the green plants used as part of Sumi's flower arrangements. This was both utilitarian and aesthetic. It saved money to grow both the flowers and the greenery on site and to supplement that supply more modestly with other flowers purchased from the wholesale market. It also distinguished Tokio Florist from others, as few flower shops grew their wares on site any longer. Moreover, it enabled them to offer flowers that were rarely found at the wholesale market, such as Iceland poppies, a specialty because their blooms only last a few days; the only way to sell them was if you grew them. Sumi and Frank acknowledged that their customers came to Tokio Florist because the flowers were fresh. So, when supermarkets began to sell imported flowers in bulk, Tokio Florist's customer base--which had followed them from Los Feliz--remained. Though Mayfair Market (Gelson's today) across the street and, later, Trader Joe's next door might have sold their flowers at a lower price, the cut flowers and arrangements from Tokio Florist lasted longer and bore the hand of Sumi's artistry.<sup>60</sup> When interviewers asked Sumi what set her florist shop apart from the rest, she replied: "Mine is causal. We live here. It's just...I don't know how to describe it. But my customers love it, so it's nice."<sup>61</sup> The personal touch and artistry was inseparable from the fact that the business was also a home.

Sumi had gained a reputation for her flair for flower design. People came seeking her design skills, which was another way she distinguished the offerings of the family business from those of the corporate chains that had increasingly overtaken the market, even by the time Tokio Florist reopened on Hyperion. Her love for color was known, and also home-grown, likely the influence of her long-time provision of floral arrangements to the nuns at Our Mother of Good Counsel and Immaculate Heart, where Sister Corita had her art studio and imparted the message that coloring outside the lines was okay, and there is no such thing as a wrong color combination. Sumi's colorful arrangements adorned not only both of those religious institutions, but also the nearby television studios (KCET and Channel 7), which used her arrangements for their sets. Movie studios commissioned Tokio Florist to create flower sculptures, for which Frank crafted a frame out of styrofoam and wood, to be adorned much like a Rose Parade float.<sup>62</sup> Since they rarely went to the movies, Sumi and Frank weren't always aware of their Hollywood clientele, and when they did spot actor-customers on the small screen of their home TV set it would inevitably elicit a commentary that illuminates the personalized nature of the family business. Once, spotting a character on MASH who was a regular customer, Sumi commented on how nice he was to his mother, while Frank grumbled about his stingy tips.<sup>63</sup>

Well into the 1980s, Hyperion was conducive to automobile-oriented consumption, and it was easy to drive right up, especially since the single pole, barrel-box Plexiglass signage installed streetside in 1965 by Kennedy Outdoor Advertising Company (based just down the street on Hyperion) rose nearly to the tree line, to alert motorists from far afield. Congestion was not the issue it is today, though one customer who had patronized the Tokio Florist when it was on Los Feliz and followed it to Hyperion still grimaces at the memory of hitting another customer with her car in the 1960s. Perhaps fonder were the memories shared by other women, mothers of sons especially, who have keen recollections of buying corsages and boutonnieres for their high schoolers' dances and proms, a tradition that Sumi Kozawa may have fortified by also giving so many of these flower arrangements away for free. She also gave free advice. One gentleman visiting the estate sale held on the property in 2018 remembered that it was Sumi who showed him the way to affix the corsage he had purchased for his first date ever; she answered his pleas on what to say and wear. It was a place to chew the fat, according to some, as Sumi would busily work on flower arrangements while chatting and Frank would sit smoking a cigar, until called out to make deliveries.

Others in the Japanese American community remember turning to Tokio Florist for funeral wreaths and other arrangements.<sup>64</sup> Frank Kozawa was proficient in kanji, (the Japanese writing system comprised of Chinese characters), which he had learned as a youth in Japan. With a brush and ink, he employed his shuji (Japanese calligraphy) skills on the strips of paper that were part of traditional Japanese funeral arrangements. Many also remembered Tokio Florist as a gathering place, since it was open seven days a week except for New Year's Day. Frank and Sumi, or her sister Rose, always seemed to be there, a welcoming neighborhood presence. During times when they had a lot of orders, the Tokio Florist seemed even more like a civic hub, as others from the community would come to lend a hand, including Mr. and Mrs. Yoshida, whose family had formerly, from as early as 1926, owned the Pico Street Nursery.<sup>65</sup> They could work on the flower arrangements and share dirt on flower trade at the same time.

In 2006, 90-year-old Sumi —Yuki Sakai's eldest daughter—closed the Tokio Florist at 2718 Hyperion Avenue. By then, Tokio Florist had been continuously operated as a family business in the area for 77 years, with the exception of World War II.

CONCLUSION

The Tokio Florist is among the last remaining material and contextual markers of the flower farms and flower shops and stands that dotted the Silver Lake, Los Feliz, and Atwater neighborhoods. The property narrates a history of Japanese/Japanese Americans in the flower industry that has rare representation, especially in terms of continuity between pre- and post-World War II and, moreover, connections to a later period of change in terms of the cut-flower business and its Japanese American community cohesion.<sup>66</sup> The SurveyLA Wholesale Markets theme study for the Commercial Development Context Statement underscored the significance of the flower trade on the region in the mid to late twentieth century, which consisted of cut flower farms and florist shops. The survey was unable to identify extant cut flower farms. While large scale flower farms have given way to the ubiquitous housing tracts throughout the Southland, much of the property at Tokio Florist was used for flower growing in similar ways, albeit on a smaller scale. The usage of the property for flower production is reminiscent of the large presence that this industry had in Southern California. Historian and architect Dolores Hayden suggests that “the special character the flower fields contributed to Los Angeles’s urban landscape is equal to the vineyards and the citrus groves. Flower fields began to be an essential part of the city in the 1890s, when the spicy scent of carnations filled the first commercial field on the corner of Jefferson and Main.”<sup>67</sup> Hayden also reminds us of the people behind this industry. She highlights the involvement of Japanese Americans in floriculture and the impact it had on the region in the “Remembering Little Tokyo on First Street” chapter of her book The Power of Place.

Tokio Florist at 2718 Hyperion stands out as one of only four long-time neighborhood businesses recorded in the Silver Lake- Echo Park- Elysian Valley Community area by SurveyLA.<sup>68</sup> The business not only is a rare example of a long-standing commercial presence in the community, but also reflects the presence of Asian Americans in Silver Lake. Currently, there are no monuments, markers, or existing buildings and businesses devoted to these elements of ethnic heritage, agricultural roots of Los Angeles’s industrial heritage, or commercial or social history in this neighborhood, nor are there very many outside of it.

The remarkable dedication of the Sakai-Kozawas to keep Tokio Florist open 364 days a year, closing only on New Year’s Day, was a product of the shared commitment of the entire family to contribute to the operation of the business. This expression of the traditional family-oriented work ethic of such Japanese American businesses captures a deeper cultural and historical meaning when put into the context of economic survival after the World War II camps.

In addition, the business was operated out of their place of residence. If customers peered through the windows as they made their way up to the cash register on the front porch to purchase their flowers, they might have caught a glimpse of the interior of the Kozawa family's residence. Japanese decorative elements, along with family heirlooms and portraits covered the living and dining room spaces--visual markings of a Japanese American home. Though most of the business operations took place on the property in areas outside of the home, their business administration was handled inside the home, with more than one room serving as a business office. The indoor-outdoor spaces created by Frank, however, literally blurred the lines between home and work, but this did not seem to detract from the focus on family. Both the business and the residence allowed the Sakai-Kozawas the ability to raise their daughter and take care of Sumi's elderly mother, Yuki, while earning a living. The Sakai-Kozawa family preserved this way of life for at least three generations. Home movies document family members gathering in the driveway of Tokio Florist to practice the Japanese New Year tradition of mochitsuki (pounding steamed rice) to make mochi (steamed rice cakes). Family members took turns pounding the sweet sticky rice with kine (wooden mallets) and usu (typically a large stone or concrete basin) that Frank created in his workshop. Through these activities that took place on the grounds of the family's business and residence, the Kozawa family preserved aspects of their Japanese cultural heritage in a way that was uniquely Japanese American.

The ways in which the Sakai-Kozawa family left their imprint on the site reflect the contributions that Japanese American immigrants and subsequent generations have made towards economic enterprise and the social fabric of Los Angeles.

Of the over 1100 Historic-Cultural Monuments designated by the City of Los Angeles, only seven represent the Japanese American community, despite its long-standing history and contributions to the city since the 1880s. The Japanese Union Church of Los Angeles (HCM #312), Hompa Hongwanji Buddhist Temple (HCM #313), and the Aoyama Tree/Koyasan Buddhist Temple (HCM #920) represent religious institutions. The former Holiday Bowl (HCM #688) represents sports and leisure. Manzanar (HCM # 160) and Tuna Canyon (HCM # 1039) represent the wartime incarceration of Japanese Angelenos, which although had a profound impact, should not be what solely defines the community. Finally, the Japanese Hospital (HCM #1131) represents a successful challenge against the dejure and defacto discrimination that Japanese and other ethnic groups faced throughout the city's history. None of these sites, however, sufficiently represents the significant contributions that Japanese Americans have made towards economic enterprise in the City of Los Angeles over the last 130 years.

As a result of the contributions of the Sakai-Kozawa family, Tokio Florist at 2718 Hyperion Avenue has long reflected the social and cultural diversity as well as the ingenuity and economic enterprise that have been intrinsic to Los Angeles.

Silver Lake Area Guide

DON CLEMENT / Los Angeles Times

Hilly Silver Lake neighborhood is covered with trees and homes. The view here, from beyond the reservoir, is toward the west.

During the Olympic Arts Festival, Times Restaurant Editor Ruth Reichl and Staff Writer John Dreyfuss explored neighborhoods where events were taking place and described restaurants and other highlights. Now, their neighborhood reports will continue from time to time with visits to various communities, starting today with Silver Lake.

By JOHN DREYFUSS, Times Staff Writer

For 17 years, Stanton J. Price has lived in the same house overlooking Silver Lake Reservoir. Like many Silver Lake area residents, the lawyer enjoys his unusual neighborhood. He is proud of it, and likes to drive friends around, pointing out the sights.

"Over the years, Silver Lake has basically been the kind of area for people who want to live a middle-class life but for one reason or another can't quite manage it in a traditional neighborhood," Price said. "This has generally been a tolerant neighborhood."

Tolerance has made it easier for Silver Lake to play host to large populations of Asians, interracial couples, artists, Latinos, gays and lesbians. The area has drawn an even bigger contingent of hard-to-define types who might best be labeled individualists, people whose thinking about politics, values and traditions is outside the mainstream.

Sometimes lapses occur in the tolerance, as they have recently between gays and Latinos. But both groups are working to repair the damage, and that is Silver Lake's way: Live and let live, and, if there is friction, work to solve the problem.

Driving through the hills of Silver Lake (a few of which, such as on Fargo and Baxter streets, are enough to make you airsick) reveals that there is as much variety in the architecture as in the people. Houses range from mansions to apartments to tiny shacks. Mediterranean, Midwestern and modern houses abound. From the mid-1920s through the early '60s, Silver Lake was a showcase for some of California's best-known and most innovative and influential architects.

Listed below are stores as diverse as a ravioli factory and an internationally known chess store, a gay bookstore and a mini-department store.

Places to eat also illustrate the diversity of Silver Lake. There is a Mexican butcher shop with chorizo and carnitas as good as you're likely to find in Los Angeles, there's a restaurant that features home cooking that really is like home cooking, there are gay and lesbian bars, a taco stand run by a Thai native who makes better burritos than many Latinos, a Mexican restaurant owned by a Latino woman that serves French and Italian enchiladas, and, in case you miss the mainstream, a coffee shop that would be at home in Bakersfield.

Silver Lake is not for everyone. Those who are uncomfortable outside the mainstream would probably not be comfortable living there. But almost anyone can find something in Silver Lake worth visiting.

Places to Eat

Numbers preceding each paragraph in the following sampling of places to eat in the Silver Lake area are locaters for the accompanying map.

1. Burrito King, 2823 Hyperion Ave., 663-9378. Monday-Thursday 10 a.m.-2 a.m., Friday-Saturday 10 a.m.-2:30 a.m., Sunday 10 a.m.-1:30 a.m. Shredded-beef tacos and machaca burritos are a hit at this Mexican food stand, along with red- or green-chile burritos made with big chunks of beef, and chorizo burritos.

2. Woody's Hyperion, 2810 Hyperion Ave., 660-1503. Daily 11:30 a.m.-2 a.m. "Just say gay bar," responds David, the bartender, when asked how to categorize Woody's. "We're a nice place," he adds, describing one of the more popular gathering places for Silver Lake's gay population. There's dancing nightly to music played by a disc jockey, and Sunday nights there's a male strip show.

3. Tomi's, 2804 Hyperion Ave., 666-1019. Monday-Saturday 6:30 a.m.-3:30 p.m. This coffee shop, with space for seven customers at the counter and another 20 at half a dozen tables, is popular for breakfast and lunch. Owner Fred Joe says his Wednesday short-rib special and Thursday roast-pork special are big sellers at lunch. A different special is offered each day.

4. Say Cheese, 2800 Hyperion Ave., 665-0545. Tuesday-Sunday 10 a.m.-6:30 p.m. Jack and Esther Goldstyn offer more than a wide range of cheeses. For example, they sell imported pates, such as liver and mushroom from Brussels, and pork and duck from France. Sun-dried tomatoes are imported from Italy, and from France comes bar-le-duc, currants whose seeds have been removed with a goose feather before the fruit is immersed in hot syrup. Shelves at Say Cheese hold two dozen kinds of coffee and more varieties of tea, plus spices, candies, herbs, truffles, caviar and gift items such as coffee makers and teakettles.

5. Hub Mart, 2738 Hyperion Ave., 664-5118. Monday-Saturday 9 a.m.-9 p.m., Sunday 9 a.m.-7 p.m. Customers address clerks by name, and vice versa, at this friendly supermarket. Butcher Gene Tognarelli sells stuffed lamb and veal breasts, plus beef and lamb kebabs "marinated in our secret sauce." Assistant butcher Tony Alvarez and his wife, Margarita, provide the market with fast-selling home-made burritos and tamales. Danny Cosentino always has a few hard-to-get, out-of-season items in his produce department. The Continental Deli features cheesecake and apple strudel from Brooklyn.

6. Song Hay, 2720 Griffith Park Blvd., 662-0978. Monday-Saturday 11 a.m.-9:30 p.m. Popular items at this Cantonese restaurant include hot braised chicken and wor won ton soup. Kwong and Wan Wong are both the owners and the cooks, as they have been for the 8¼ years that the restaurant has been in business.

7. New York Company Bar and Grill, 2470 Fletcher Drive, 665-1115. Monday-Friday 11 a.m.-3 p.m., Sunday-Thursday 5:30 p.m.-10 p.m., Friday-Saturday 5:30 p.m.-11 p.m., Sunday buffet 11 a.m.-3 p.m. Photomurals of New York City on the walls lend a Big Apple atmosphere to this restaurant designed by co-owner Neil Castren, who personally buys and arranges the fresh flowers kept on every table. Fresh fish, duck with honey sauce, prime rib and raspberry chicken are popular menu items. Castren says at least 20 varieties of ice cream made in his kitchen are always available, including such exotic flavors as peanut butter (the best seller) and Cheddar cheese. Desserts include six kinds of cheesecake.

8. Zen Restaurant, 2609 Hyperion on Ave., 665-2829. Monday-Friday 11:30 a.m.-2:30 p.m., daily 5-10:30 p.m. Owner Akira Takashio, who offers a full Japanese menu, says that luncheon favorites include sashimi and chicken teriyaki, while tempura and sashimi are especially popular at dinner. Handsome new sushi and cocktail bars are scheduled to open Oct. 5.

9. Rudolph's, 2500 Riverside Drive, 669-1226. Sunday-Thursday 11 a.m.-11 p.m., Friday-Saturday 11 a.m.-midnight. Movie idol Rudolph Valentino inspired the name for this restaurant, which was a beauty salon until about a year ago. Pictures of Valentino in a number of costumes and with a variety of women decorate the walls.

10. Sweet Baby Jane's Something Wonderful, 2520 Hyperion Ave., 664-2405. Monday-Thursday 11 a.m.-11:30 p.m., Friday-Saturday 11 a.m.-12:30 a.m. Sunday noon-10 p.m. Due to open within two weeks. Some things wonderful include ice cream, cakes, tarts, sandwiches, soups and salads, according to co-owner Mike Lewis, who says his store's name comes from his partner: Baby Jane Holzer, star of Andy Warhol films in the '60s. Lewis says that, except for cheesecake, they'll make everything they sell, including the ice-cream cones.

11. Astro Family Restaurant, 2300 Fletcher Drive, 663-9241. Always open. With its orange-plastic upholstered booths and acoustic tile ceiling, Astro is a carbon copy of coffee houses found in almost every city. But the appearance is deceiving. The restaurant does serve the usual coffee-shop fare, but portions are huge, and manager Michael Pappas puts specials on the menu like moussaka (eggplant, ground beef, zucchini and potatoes covered with cream sauce and baked), pastitsio (baked macaroni, ground beef and cream sauce) and Greek-style lamb shanks. Hamburgers and fresh fruit salad are among popular everyday items.

12. El Chico, 2505 Glendale Blvd., 665-1749. Monday-Friday 10 a.m.-7:45 p.m., Saturday 10 a.m.-5:45 p.m. It seems unlikely that one of the best burritos in Silver Lake should be made by a native of Thailand in an ancient, remodeled gasoline station, but that's the case. In a tiny kitchen so clean that you could eat off most surfaces, Tony Tanphavackul uses a huge copper pot to cook 75 pounds of meat at a time to go into pork or beef burritos, which include beans, cheese, avocados and chile sauce if you want it. Tony also makes tacos and other Mexican food, plus hamburgers for those who prefer them.

13. Cache, 2395 Glendale Blvd., 660-6154. Monday-Friday 11 a.m.-3 p.m., Sunday-Thursday 5:30-11 p.m., Friday-Saturday 5:30 p.m.-midnight. The lounge is open nightly until 2 a.m. A year and a half ago, an owner of the Burrito King chain teamed up with the owner of an auto-body shop to open this big, busy restaurant, which features South American and Spanish food and—Wednesday-Sunday—live Latin dance music like sambas, tangos and cha cha chas until 2 a.m. Starting Monday, live jazz will be featured on Monday nights. Co-owner Herbert Gonzalez (the former body-shop man) says that big sellers include paella, jumbo shrimp stuffed with whitefish and crab and served with lobster sauce, steak a la Cubana, which is a New York steak with onions, parsley, white rice, black beans and fried plantains. Men must wear jackets (but not necessarily neckties) in the evening, and no one is admitted wearing jeans.

14. La Fama Ravioli, 2378 Glendale Blvd., 662-8900. Monday-Thursday 6 a.m.-3 p.m. The front room of this little two-room factory that turned out its first pasta 36 years ago, is crowded with thousands of empty ravioli boxes, waiting to be filled by food made in the back on ancient, hand-operated machinery and an old St. Clair gas range that might have come from your grandmother's kitchen. Owner John Lee says that the secret of tasty ravioli is tenderizing the dough by running it through a rolling machine six or seven times.

15. Red Lion Tavern, 2366 Glendale Blvd., 662-5337. Monday-Saturday 11 a.m.-2 a.m., Sunday 11 a.m.-midnight. After 24 years in Silver Lake, this German restaurant and bar has become a highly popular landmark. You can get German beer on tap and drink it from a glass, an earthenware stein (which you can keep if you pay extra) or a glass shaped like a boot, which comes in 1-, 1½- and 2-liter sizes. Co-owner Hans Loderich says that the big-selling menu items include ham-and-cheese sandwiches (those in the know ask for schinken und kase), roast-beef sandwiches, a big sausage platter containing a variety of sausages, wiener schnitzel and beef rouladen, which is rolled beef stuffed with pickles, onions and bacon.

16. The Onyx, 4471 Sunset Drive, 660-5820. Monday-Wednesday 4:30 p.m.-1 a.m.; Thursday noon-1 a.m.; Friday-Saturday noon-3 a.m., Sunday 11:30 a.m.-1 a.m. John Leech and artist-designer Fumiko Robinson own and operate this tiny cafe, which serves items such as espresso, tea, phosphates, pastries, sandwiches, quiche and pasta salad. The Onyx also serves frappes, which are a combination of ice, milk and flavors such as chocolate, orange, vanilla, rose and anise. A Sunday brunch menu includes omelets and French toast made with potato bread. Every eight weeks the cafe mounts a new art show.

17. El Chavo, 4441 Sunset Blvd., 664-0871. Sunday-Thursday 11:30 a.m.-11 p.m., Friday-Saturday 11:30 a.m.-midnight. Intimate, unpretentious and friendly, this Mexican restaurant maintains a reputation as one of the best in Silver Lake, or out of it, for that matter. You can't make reservations, and especially on weekends you may have to wait awhile to be seated. Offered are dishes like Sonora poached chicken, which is sauteed with bacon, chiles, onions, tomatoes, cilantro and ripe olives, or for El Chavo's popular chile rellenos, or the unusual lengua en salsa Espanole, which is tongue served plain, in Spanish tomato-and-vegetable sauce, or with mole sauce, depending on how you order it. A guitarist/vocalist entertains nightly from 6:30 p.m. until half an hour before closing.

18. La Villa Taxco, 4444 Sunset Blvd., 665-5751. Monday-Thursday 11:30 a.m.-11:30 p.m.; Friday 11:30 a.m.-1 a.m.; Saturday noon-1 a.m., Sunday 10 a.m.-11 p.m. This huge chain restaurant seats 250 diners in five rooms, where you can order a wide variety of food from a 10-page menu. Two guitar players entertain Wednesday-Saturday 6-10 p.m. The biggest-selling item is carnitas (pork with relish, guacamole, rice and beans). There is Sunday omelet brunch (which is not particularly Mexican) and a popular happy hour from 3:30 to 7 p.m. Monday-Friday. If you feel like it, you can play Pac-Man, Ms. Pac-Man or Donkey Kong.

19. Casita del Campo, 1920 Hyperion Blvd., 662-4255. Sunday-Thursday 11 a.m.-midnight, Friday-Saturday 11 a.m.-2 a.m. Favorites from the menu of this popular Mexican restaurant include pollo con queso (chicken rolled in egg, cheese and spices and then deep fried) and carnitas (pork with onions, tomatoes, cilantro and hot sauce). Nina and Rudy del Campo started the restaurant as "a little tiny house" 22 years ago. Today it seats 300 diners in six rooms and on a patio.

20. Sushi Fune, 3820 Fountain Ave., 661-1366. Monday-Friday 11:30 a.m.-2 p.m., daily 5-10 p.m. If you're not careful, you'll drive past this inconsequential-looking restaurant without noticing it. But if you go inside, you'll discover a beautifully designed room that is handsome but not pretentious, simple but never dull. You might want to reserve one of the tables that looks out on a small garden that is lighted at night, or you can sit at the sushi bar. Owner Take Ito prepares dinners in an open kitchen. Favorite items include sushi and tempura in the evening, and salmon teriyaki at lunch.

21. L.A. Nicola, 4326 Sunset Blvd., 660-7217. Monday-Friday 11:30 a.m.-2:30 p.m., Monday-Saturday 5:30-10:30 p.m., Sunday 11 a.m.-3 p.m. The Nicola family has been selling food in Silver Lake since the Nicola twins, Lester and Mike, opened a market and deli across the street from this restaurant in the early 1940s. The market and deli closed four years ago when Lester's son, Larry, opened L.A. Nicola, but his father carries on tradition by hosting lunches, and his uncle helps with catering.

22. El Cid, 4212 Sunset Blvd., 668-0318. Wednesday-Sunday 6:30 p.m.-2 a.m. Spanish food and flamenco-dancing dinner shows are features at this restaurant that co-owner Jack Heywood says was once D.W. Griffiths' movie studio. The building is a handsome, solid old Mediterranean structure with a big patio for cocktails and brunches. The show features a guitarist, a male dancer, a male singer and three female dancers on stage at the front of the dining room. Popular entrees include sauteed shrimp in white garlic-wine sauce with artichoke hearts, and boneless chicken breast in Spanish wine sauce with mushrooms. Parties of three or more with reservations get tables at the front of the room near the stage.

23. Mary's Place, 4114 Santa Monica Blvd., 660-5721. Monday-Friday 6 a.m.-10 p.m., Saturday-Sunday 7 a.m.-10 p.m. Mary serves food closer to old-fashioned home cooking than you're likely to find in any other Silver Lake restaurant, or in most homes, for that matter. Portions are big, service is excellent and friendly; prices are very reasonable, everything is fresh, nothing is frozen. Owners Mary Whalen and Vernon Chase find about half of their business comes from repeat customers. Big sellers include stuffed chicken-breast dinners and lamb-chop dinners. The biscuits, which come with every breakfast and brunch, are popular, especially with gravy added, although that costs a little more than the plain biscuits. Sunday's 10 a.m.-3 p.m. champagne brunch includes choices like steak and eggs, eggs Benedict and omelets.

24. Blu Nunn, 4002 Santa Monica Blvd., 663-7221. Sunday-Tuesday 7 a.m.-9 p.m., Wednesday-Saturday 7 a.m.-4 a.m. Hamburgers, cheeseburgers and daily specials like pineapple-broccoli chicken are popular at this little stand that seats 13 at the counter and about seven more in a tiny patio.

25. Go-Between, 3928 Sunset Blvd., 660-3178. Tuesday-Sunday 4:30 p.m.-midnight. About 25 blends of coffee are available by the cup or by the pound at this coffee house, plus cappuccino, espresso, bottled juices, 18 kinds of teas and pies, cakes, ice cream, hot chocolate and muffins. You can sit inside or out on the patio on which there's a newsstand where you can buy publications to read, if you have no one to talk with while you drink your coffee.

26. La Perilla Bakery, 3918 Sunset Blvd., 667-9648. Daily 6 a.m.-8:30 p.m. Mexican bread and pastries are made and sold here, along with cakes made to order.

27. Seafood Bay, 3916 Sunset Blvd., 664-3902. Monday-Thursday 11:30 a.m.-10:30 p.m.; Friday 11:30 a.m.-11 p.m., Saturday noon-11 p.m., Sunday 4-10 p.m. Reasonable prices and large portions are trademarks of this restaurant and fish market where co-owner Sung Cha Lee says Pacific red snapper and rainbow trout are among the popular menu items. On Fridays and Saturdays, be prepared to wait in line for dinner. When asked why her restaurant is so popular, Sung Cha Lee answers, "My prices are very cheap."

28. Crest Coffee Shop, 3725 Sunset Blvd., 660-3645. Daily 6 a.m.-11 p.m. What stands out about the Crest is that it is so mainstream in an area that is so offbeat. It looks like what it is: a coffee shop you might find in any state of the union and in almost any city. If there's a departure from the norm, it is the Mexican-style specials like Pacific red snapper in ranchero sauce and huevos con chorizo.

29. El Conquistador, 3701 Sunset Blvd. 666-5136. Sunday-Thursday 11 a.m.-11 p.m., Friday-Saturday 11-1 a.m. Entertainment on a stage at the front of El Conquistador's big dining room is by female impersonators Sunday, Monday and Wednesday nights at 9 and 11 p.m. Mariachis perform on Saturdays. You can also dine under hanging potted vines in a smaller dining room, or in a garden patio at this restaurant with a reputation for serving very good Mexican food.

30. Flamingo, 3626 Sunset Blvd. 666-3736. Wednesday-Friday 4 p.m.-2 a.m., Saturday-Sunday 2 p.m.-2 a.m. This is one of Silver Lake's most popular lesbian bars. Manager Kevin James says that no one who comes through the door will be hassled. There is a big, tree-studded patio for cocktails, and inside is a bar and dancing to music played by a disc jockey. Flamingo gets crowded, and on weekends there may be a wait to get in.

31. Enchiladas Unlimited, 3603 Sunset Blvd., 665-4167. Daily 11 a.m.-11 p.m. Only a month and a half old, this informal place serves Mexican food with an international flavor: Italian enchiladas with sausage and bell pepper, French enchiladas with Swiss cheese and spinach. If the traditional rice and beans aren't to your liking, you can substitute steamed vegetables. You can eat inside or on a covered patio.

32. Bemba's Bake Shop, 1737 Silver Lake Blvd., 664-9333. Daily 8 a.m.-8 p.m. Biggest seller at this Philippine bakery is pan de sal, a roll made with slightly sweet dough. Bemba's also sells a lot of hopia, which is made from the same bread filled either with mung beans or pork fat, onions and onion leaves. The bakery also sells cakes and other sweets.

33. Millie's Coffee Shop, 3524 Sunset Blvd., NOrmandy 2-5720. (Millie's is an old-fashioned place and proud of it, so they proudly use the old-fashioned telephone prefix.) Tuesday-Friday 8 a.m.-3 p.m., Saturday-Sunday 8 a.m.-4 p.m. This tiny landmark restaurant with eight counter stools and no tables serves good food and good humor. About six months ago, neon artist Paul Greenstein and bass player Paul Keevil bought Millie's which, according to artist Paul, "had been here about 60 years. In the '20s it was called The Devil's Mess." The two Pauls serve one of Silver Lake's finest, juiciest-hamburgers—it comes with home fries mixed with onions and green peppers. Their biscuits with a peppery white, bacon-flavored gravy will both fill and satisfy you. Pork chops with mustard sauce and the avocado-tomato-cheese omelet are favorites, as is the cold curried pea soup, which the Pauls make "when the mood strikes." Decor includes pictures of Franklin D. Roosevelt looking young enough to have just been graduated from college, and the Mona Lisa looking sly enough to have just left without paying the check. A set of deer antlers hangs from the wall, as does an ancient phone that works. A couple of antique electric fans keep the place more or less cool. The juke box gives three plays for a quarter, and you can hear artists ranging from Flaco Jimenez through Little Richard and Bunny Berigan to Johnny Cash.

34. CR Place, 1700 Silver Lake Blvd., 663-7390. Monday-Friday 10:30 a.m.-8:30 p.m., Saturday 10:30 a.m.-6:30 p.m. Hamburgers, teriyaki chicken and teriyaki beef ribs are on the menu at this stand where you can eat in a pleasant, shaded patio.

35. Classical Gourmet, 1637 Silver Lake Blvd., 665-9355. Monday-Saturday 9 a.m.-6 p.m. Gunther Cohn has lived in Silver Lake for 24 years and spent almost 20 of them in the export and advertising business before opening his tiny deli about six months ago. Ten customers can sit at tables inside, and two more on the sidewalk to drink coffee, eat pastries, different salads, sandwiches or gazpacho.

36. Zamora Bros., 3322 Sunset Blvd., 666-9395. Sunday-Thursday

9 a.m.-midnight, Friday-Saturday 9 a.m.-3 p.m. One of Zamora's specialties is carritas, which is pork, tripe or beef ribs deep fried in orange juice, milk, lard, water and salt. The shop, which doubles as a Mexican deli where you can buy regular butcher items along with less traditional ones like tripe, pig's feet and cow's feet. There are ready-to-eat cueritos (pork skins cured in vinegar and pickled with peppers and carrots), chicharones (fried pork skins) and chorizo (pork sausage highly seasoned with garlic and spices). There are bakery goods, a small produce section, a choice of hot sauces and salsa and a selection of refrigerated items. Weekends Zamora's sells barbecued lamb, menudo and mole. You can eat inside or outside the store.

37. El Siete Mares, 3131 Sunset Blvd., 667-9784. Sunday-Thursday 10 a.m.-11 p.m., Friday-Saturday 10 a.m.-2 a.m. Your meal at this popular, informal seafood restaurant comes with a dish of huge, quartered lemons, a bowl of cilantro and diced onions, chips and hot sauce. The lemons, cilantro and onions add flavor to a various seafood dishes, the most popular of which is a heaping bowl of "fish stew," which is a hefty, working man's bouillabaisse. This is an unpretentious restaurant that is not cheap but gives good value in both quantity and quality.

38. Tropical Ice Cream and Bakery, 2900 Sunset Blvd., 661-8391. Daily 7:30 a.m.-10 p.m. Along with regular ice cream, Tropical sells extraordinary tropical-fruit ice creams with flavors like guanabana, papaya, mango and coconut. A cone is only 50 or 60 cents, depending on the flavor. Other specialties include a rich guava-and-cream-cheese pie, blended mixtures of tropical fruit, milk, sugar and ice called batidos, and hot sandwiches made with pork, ham, pickles, cheese and butter that assistant manager Adolfo Benitez says sell at a clip of 400 daily. The bakery has a selection of cookies and cakes. You can buy coffee, cappuccino, cafe au lait or fresh orange, carrot, and apple juice.

39. Simon's, 2836 Sunset Blvd., 663-7422. Monday-Thursday 4:30 p.m.-11 p.m., Friday-Saturday 4:30 p.m.-11:30 p.m. Tony Moutafian is a gracious host who serves Middle Eastern and American food at his restaurant and bar. His wife, Sara, a gourmet cook, prepares the food, and son Sam and his wife, Rose, help serve the customers. Prices on the menu are very reasonable.

40. Restaurant Magnolia, 2827 Sunset Blvd., 483-8475. Tuesday-Sunday 11 a.m.-10 p.m. Armenian and Greek food are specialties at this pleasant restaurant where manager Karapet Gasparian and his wife, Lilia, will make you feel at home. Popular dishes include moussaka (eggplant, ground beef, cheese, tomato and onion), lulu kebab (spiced ground beef, lamb, parsley, onions broiled on a skewer) and dolma (grape leaves stuffed with meat, rice, herbs, spices, mushrooms and green beans).

Stores

Letters preceding each paragraph in the following sampling of Silver Lake area stores are locators for the accompanying map.

A. Tokio Florist, 2718 Hyperion Ave., 664-8010. Tuesday-Saturday 10 a.m.-6 p.m., Sunday 10 a.m.-3 p.m. A jungle of trees and plants almost hides the huge old house where Sumi and Frank Kozawa have run their nursery for 28 years (for 27 years before that the family operated a flower shop at a Los Feliz Boulevard location). A 60-year-old rose plant, Japanese plum trees, a table of azaleas and cymbidium orchids greet customers. Tokio Florist is best known for cut flowers, Iceland poppies, protea (a flowering evergreen shrub) and flower arrangements for weddings and large parties.

B. Hats on Hyperion, 2544 Hyperion Ave., 667-2650. Tuesday-Friday 11:30 a.m.-6:30 p.m., Saturday 11 a.m.-5 p.m. This tiny (8x12-foot) store houses more than 100 different men's and women's hat styles, ranging in price from $1 for a painter's hat with "Have a Nice Day" written all over it to $70 for a black, formal "picture-brim Southern belle" hat.

C. Rockaway Records, 2506 Glendale Blvd., 664-3232. Monday-Saturday 10 a.m.-9:30 p.m., Sunday 10 a.m.-8 p.m. Beatles, Bowie and Springsteen records are specialties of this "buy, sell or trade" store where manager Martin Levy knows and talks about records the way a good librarian knows and talks about books. If you can't find what you want among the thousands of "rock rarities," jazz, classical, and country records in the store, you can look through an extensive catalogue, which has rarer collectibles. And if you still aren't satisfied, Levy or another Rockaway employee will try to help you. Besides records, there are tapes and music-related paper goods such as press kits, books, magazines, concert programs and advertising posters. One record jacket went for $2,000, but you can also pick out used records by artists as diverse as Dolly Parton and the London Symphony Orchestra for less than $3. If you're looking for more exotic fare, check the wall by the door, where you'll see discs such as the 1957 "Elvis Christmas Album" for $99.99 and Buddy Holly's 1965 "Holly In The Hills" for $25.

D. Vista Theatre, 4473 Sunset Drive, 660-6639. Monday-Friday 5 or 5:30 p.m.-11:30 p.m. or midnight, Saturday-Sunday 1:30 or 2 p.m.-11:30 p.m. or midnight. Since it was built in 1923 as a vaudeville and silent-movie house, this theater has gone through stages of showing porn, first-run and revival movies. Now it shows a potpourri of foreign-film premieres, revivals, gay-theme pictures (definitely not pornographic, assistant manager Scott Palmer says) and silent films, sometimes with live music accompaniment. Larger-than-life sculptures of Egyptian heads that sit atop Egyptian-style plaster columns in the theater are illuminated with red, orange or blue lights, depending on the mood of the current movie.

Tokio Florist: The History Behind the Sign on Hyperion

By Diane Kanner, Ledger Columnist

The Sakai family opened Tokio Florist in 1929 on land extending from 4537 to 4555 Los Feliz Boulevard, from Hillhurst to Rodney on the north side of the street.

"In those days," said Sumiko "Sumi" Sakai Kozawa, 92, "you could stroll across Los Feliz without worrying about traffic. [And] Greta Garbo would come by in her chauffeured limo and buy huge bunches of sweet peas for five cents."

Other regulars to the flower shop included Olivia de Havilland, Joan Fontaine, Ginger Rogers, Cecil de Mille, Deanna Durbin, Martha Raye and Walt Disney.

The Sakai's paid $60 a month rent for the land, a large old home, a pond and a windmill which pumped up groundwater. Soil was cultivated by horsepower and poinsettias, carnations, gladioli and ranunculus were raised. Kozawa and her four brothers and sisters had many responsibilities, including digging up bulbs. "As we worked, my grandmother told us fairy tales in Japanese," said Kozawa.

After the attack on Pearl Harbor in 1941, Kozawa and her family were detained in the high desert at Manzanar.

When the war ended, and the Sakais were released, Kozawa married Yukio "Frank" Kozawa. Land was in demand for housing, and the Sakais were given one month to move to make way for four 32-unit apartment buildings which remain today: 4505, 4519, 4533 and 4545 Los Feliz Boulevard.

The family moved to a large craftsman-style home on Hyperion Avenue where Kozawa lives today. The flower shop took up much of the large lot. A towering sign remains, but the business was closed when Kozawa and her husband retired.

The house, I learned through research with the Los Angeles Department of Building and Safety, was built in 1914 at 326 So. Normandie Ave. between 3rd and 4th Streets and moved at a cost of $5,000 to the present location in the spring of 1929 by Kress House Moving Company.

For Kozawa, who has been offered $5 million dollars for the property, there are no plans to move. "Ninety years of going to the flower market at two a.m." have made her appreciate the peace and quiet inside the big old house on a busy street.

Growing up on the flats near L.C. Brand

Two large, white houses stood close together on the slopes above northwest Glendale in the early 1920s. One was El Miradero, home of L.C. and Mary Louise Brand. Another was Ard Evin, home of Dan and Margaret Campbell. A young girl named Sumi was familiar with both houses and both families.

Sumi and her parents, Masao (Fred) and Yuki Sakai, were living with Sumi's maternal grandparents, Asakichi and Ura Kawakami, who had come from Japan several years earlier. The Kawakamis rented land from Brand and raised flowers for the wholesale market on Wall Street.

Sumi's father, also from Japan, had trained as a doctor and had come to the United States to learn English, but without U.S. medical training or licensing, it was difficult to find work in his field.

Angeles, was 4 years old or so when they moved to Glendale and her father went out seeking employment.

Recently, Sumi Sakai Kozawa came up to Brand Library with Netty Carr, an amateur historian for the Atwater/Silver Lake area, where they both live. They toured the grounds before meeting me in the newly restored mansion.

Kozawa was very young when they moved to the Brand property and they only stayed a couple of years. However, she has vivid memories of that time.

They lived on the flats below Brand's house, in a two-story house with a horse barn and a couple of mules, plus her pet burrow.

Her grandfather and her uncle, Kiyue, grew seasonal flowers such as asters, carnations and delphiniums.

"Sometimes I had to help pull weeds," Kozawa recalled. "I was just a little kid and mostly played around. There were lots of deer and rabbits around then. They wanted to eat the flowers, so that was always a problem."

There were also avocado and orange trees, grown elsewhere on Brand's property.

"Mr. Brand used to bring us buckets of avocados, then called alligator pears. We had to save the seeds; they were needed in order to plant more trees," she said.

"Sometimes we went by the front gate of the driveway leading to the Brand house. It looked like a castle to me," she said. "I remember Mr. Brand very well. He was very friendly and would walk over to talk to us and visit. I played all over the Brand property, but never went up to the house. My father wouldn't let me. I never saw Mrs. Brand."

Brand's airfield was not far away. "When he wanted to go flying, he asked my grandfather or my uncle to come and hold the tail of the airplane down as he cranked the engine," she recalled.

Sometimes he would take them up in the air with him. Kozawa, a tomboy, wanted to go along, but her father wouldn't allow it.

Their house was closer to

"Everyone treated me well," she said.

About 70 nurses and 40 of their supporters rallied outside of USC-Verdugo Hills Hospital on Wednesday afternoon as they called for the hospital's administration to bring their working conditions up to par with the university's other hospitals.

The nurses unionized in March and now the California Nurses Assn. is in the midst of contract negotiations with the hospital, said Dinorah Williams, the nurses' labor representative. About 72% of the hospital's 150 nurses voted to join the union in March in search of better retirement plans and improved staffing.

Southern California bought the Glendale hospital last July, promising to make $30 million in capital improvements.

But Williams said a "new coat of paint" is not enough, adding that working conditions at the 158-bed hospital are not equal to the university's other hospitals in Los Angeles. Nurses carried signs in cardinal red and gold, the school's colors, that said "Fight on USC," but "fight" was crossed out and replaced with "shame."

Calls to a hospital spokesperson were not returned for comment by deadline.

Happy Birthday JMHS!

Celebrating 85 Years of Excellence!!

John Marshall High School turns 85 this year and we will be celebrating all year long! The school opened on January 26, 1931, with approximately eleven hundred students and forty-eight teachers. The school was named after John Marshall (1755-1835), who served as Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court from 1801 to 1835. Known as the Great Chief Justice, he was the principal architect of the American system of constitutional law. His interpretations of laws are still used as examples today.

- Administration: Joseph Madison Sniffen, for whom the auditorium was named, served as the first principal, while Hugh Boyd and Geraldine Keith acted as Marshall's first vice-principals. The football field was named in honor of Mr. Boyd and the library was named for Mrs. Keith.

- The Campus: In its first phase, the school had only four buildings. These included the Main Building, the Cafeteria/Home Economics Building, and two shop buildings. The East Wing was added in 1932 and the auditorium in 1937. The gymnasium was also completed in 1937 but the bleachers were not finished until October of 1939 as a WPA project. (Until then, students watched the football games sitting in the dirt on the hill where the bleachers would eventually be located.) The initial cost of building the school (1930-1931) included $450,000 for buildings, $350,000 for the land, and $100,000 for equipment for a total of $850,000. Once the construction actually began in September of 1930, the school was built in four months, setting a new record for completing construction.

Now the school covers 19 acres and has taken over a street (Monon Street is now the driveway) and several homes (the 700 building and the upper faculty parking lot).

President's Message...

Happy New Year to All!

We began the year with our Annual General Meeting on January 12, when we elected our Board of Trustees and officers for 2016. We said good-bye to two Board members, Ed Firth S'59 and Gordon Hamilton S'73, as they move on to new experiences in other cities. We also welcomed a new Board member, Ovanes Shaginyan S'2004, who has worked with us on Grad Night and other projects. Please see the full list of Board members on the back page.

During this 85th Anniversary year, we are planning several events to keep the celebration going. We hope that you will join us as we honor the school that we all love.

It is also time to pay your dues! Most of our revenue comes from your dues and donations, and these are the funds we use to support the school and the students. If you are an annual member, please consider upping your membership status to a life membership. If you already are a life member, please consider making a donation.

As always, please keep us updated with address changes or new email addresses so that we can continue to be connected.

So proud to be a Barrister!

Congratulations to former Barrister Leonardo DiCaprio for winning the 2016 Golden Globe for Best Actor in The Revenant in January. He has been nominated for the Golden Globe ten times and has won three. At press time, Leo is also nominated for an Academy Award, his fifth nomination. The Oscars will be announced on February 28.

Marshall Alumna Faculty Member Wins Award

Orquidea (Orky) Labrador (S'87), Marshall graduate and Physical Education teacher/coach, has been recognized by the City of Los Angeles as an advocate for Latinas in Sports. Orky was honored at a ceremony held at City Hall in October of 2015. The award was presented to Orky as the representative of Council District 4 by Councilmembers David Ryu and Nury Martinez.

Orky was celebrated for her 20 years of coaching in the Marshall community and for her accomplishments as a role model for female athletes by helping them to achieve their dreams of earning a college degree and playing for a university softball program.

She credits her success to her experiences as a Barrister and is helping new generations of inner city girls to find their success as well.

The Alumni Association congratulates Orky on this important award and wishes her continued success at Marshall and in the community.

Marshall Graduate Turns 100!

Sumiko Lilian Sakai Kozawa, Class of Summer 1934, celebrated her 100th birthday on January 10, 2016.

Sumi, as she is known, grew up in Los Feliz when the area was open fields and had no traffic. In 1929, Sumi's widowed mother Yuki and her five children moved to a home on Los Feliz Boulevard between Hillhurst and Rodney. There, they opened a flower stand called Tokio Florist. They leased five acres and grew flowers and lived in a small house on the property. Since Sumi was the oldest, she had to help her mother so she never went to school functions or got involved in school clubs or attended any sports events because she had to go home right after school to take care of her siblings.

Sumi recalled that, at graduation in 1934, the girls wore white or pastel gowns and the boys wore navy blue suits. Graduation was held at the Greek Theatre, where the students walked down the aisle and onto the stage through an arch of flowers. She remembers two classmates, Al Mitchell and Grace Yasu Kusumoto, who lived at the Japanese orphanage on Redcliff in Silverlake. Al lived on Avocado so Sumi would walk down Hillhurst to Avocado to meet him and they would walk to Marshall by cutting across the empty lots on the way to school. Al and Sumi remained friends and attended a few Marshall High reunions together. Sumi remembers that her Algebra teacher's name was Mr. Fossett.

During World War II, Sumi and her family were relocated to Manzanar. They returned to Los Feliz after the war and Sumi married Frank Kozawa. There was a housing shortage and they were forced to leave their home to make room for four apartment buildings, which are still there. Sumi and Frank moved to Hyperion Avenue and set up Tokio Florists on a lot that could have the florist in the front and a big Craftsman style house in the back. After serving the community for many years, they closed the business when they retired. Sumi still lives there, enjoying her oasis in the middle of the city.

The Alumni Association wishes Sumi a very happy 100th birthday!

CollegePath LA (CPLA) is a project at John Marshall High that mobilizes the community to support students as they apply to college and explore careers. Now in its sixth year, CPLA has brought over 250 community volunteers, including several alumnae, to speak with students about their careers, work with them on their college essays and help parents with their federal financial aid (FAFSA) forms. Working closely with the lone college counselor, Tricia Bryan, and several teachers, CPLA has involved over 2,000 students.

If you would like to help students apply to college or explore careers, please go to our website at www.collegepathla.com and complete a simple volunteer form. We would love your support as we continue to grow and expand.

85 Years of Excellence! The History of JMHS

- The First Students: When the school first opened, it was a six-year high school with grades 7-12. However, at that time, no seniors were enrolled because they were allowed to graduate from the school they had attended before Marshall opened. So, actually, there were no seniors the first year and the first class to graduate from Marshall was the class of Summer 1932, led by Senior Class President Norval McDonald. (Prior to 1971, students were graduated either in the Winter class or the Summer class. The last Winter class at Marshall was Winter 1970). In 1938 the school went to a three-year plan.

- School Motto, Seal, and Colors: During the first semester of Marshall's existence the faculty and students cooperatively selected the school motto, seal, and colors. The school motto, suggested by faculty member Russell Edwards, "Veritas Vincit--Truth Conquers," was an easy choice since this was a favorite sentiment of John Marshall. The school seal shows an open Book of Knowledge at the top and the Lamp of Learning at the bottom. In between are projected the Scales of Justice with "Veritas Vincit" emblazoned on the bar. Two shades of blue became the official colors of John Marshall High School -- the moonlit blue of midnight and the sunlit blue of dawn. A vote was held in homeroom; Doris Bashor McKently S'36 remembers taking fabric swatches to all the homerooms so students could see the colors and decide. Since the color blue is symbolic of truth, the choice of colors harmonized with the school's motto. Also at that time, teachers and students began the practice of wearing the school colors on Fridays. The lyrics of the Alma Mater, the official school song, were composed by two Marshall students who graduated in the Winter Class of 1939, John Montapert and Henry Suyukida.

- Our Mascot: Johnny Barrister is the school's mascot. A student first designed his image in 1945. Since John Marshall was in the legal profession and served as a jurist, it was fitting that Marshall's students be called BARRISTERS. to be continued...
