

insurance. Los Angeles' non-union workers, who comprise more than 80 percent of the workforce, are less likely to have health care coverage than their non-union counterparts in the state or nation.

Los Angeles' uninsured are more likely to be employed by small firms, yet a surprising number of large firms also employ uninsured workers. In the largest firms (over 500 workers) in Los Angeles, some 42 percent of working poor employees do not have health insurance.

Latinos are over-represented among those in Los Angeles lacking health insurance. Latinos comprise 61 percent of those lacking health insurance in Los Angeles, even though they account for only 42 percent of the county's working age population. Latinos constitute 78 percent of the uninsured working poor, even greater than their 73 percent share of the working poor. Lack of health insurance for Latino workers and their families is a problem across the country.

A Reinvigorated Labor Movement Joins with Community Groups to Tackle Working Poverty in Los Angeles

Workers and community groups in Los Angeles are on the cutting edge of trying to improve the lives of the working poor. A reinvigorated labor movement won national attention in April 2000 when thousands of mostly immigrant janitors took to the streets to fight for a contract that would bring them out of poverty. The largest single union organizing victory since the 1930s took place in 1999 in Los Angeles, with 74,000 low-wage home health care workers winning representation. A coalition of clergy, labor and community groups fought to raise wages for the 10,000 service workers—such as airport security guards, janitors and food service workers—who work for city contractors or on city-owned land. Immigrant rights groups are seeking to improve the plight of restaurant workers, day laborers and others on the margins. A region-wide coalition of community organizations and unions has organized to bring quality jobs to welfare recipients, as well as job training and placement in high-paying multimedia professions to inner-city residents. Such initiatives need to be supported by local, state and national policies that put the needs of struggling families at the forefront.

A New Policy Agenda to Make Work Pay

This country needs a strategy to make sure that the economy works for everyone. That means raising the minimum wage, supporting living wage ordinances where appropriate, and ensuring the right to organize in the workplace. Government programs to assist the poor, like food stamps and low-income housing subsidies, are needed and should be expanded. But they are not always the best answer. It is unlikely that voters will permit governments to contribute the funding necessary to lift the poor out of poverty. In addition, many families who are eligible for anti-poverty programs never take advantage of them. A better solution is to ensure that workers earn enough to support themselves and their families. The following steps would help further this goal:

- ø Raise the Minimum Wage. Although California is one of six states to set the minimum wage at slightly higher than the national level ($5.75 per hour as opposed to $5.15), it is still too low to keep families out of poverty. Contrary to popular perception, minimum wage earners in Los Angeles tend to be adults (86 percent) and to work full time (70 percent). A higher minimum wage that is indexed to inflation would mean that workers would stand a greater chance of sharing in productivity gains.

- Ø Approve Living Wage Ordinances. Living wage ordinances require businesses that contract with government, do business on government-owned land, or receive large amounts of public financial assistance to pay workers a more realistic minimum wage. This ensures public money is not being used to subsidize low-paying jobs. Living wage laws can also be good for businesses that want to compete for government services based on quality rather than on low wages.
- Ø Support Subsidy Accountability. Governments routinely spend millions of dollars supporting business development in the name of job creation and neighborhood revitalization, but little attention has been paid to the quality of jobs in those developments. In recent years, however, state and local governments have begun attaching job quality standards to subsidy deals. Such laws encourage real economic development by recognizing that healthy communities cannot be created with low-wage, part-time jobs.
- Ø Make Sure the Tax Code Supports the Poorest Families. An effective tool available to boost the incomes of the working poor is the federal Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC). The EITC provides a refundable tax credit regardless of whether a family owes income tax. Like 11 other states, California could adopt a tax credit to support the federal one. Since many workers will never take advantage of it, however, the EITC cannot be a substitute for raising wages.
- Ø Reform Federal Labor Law. While the National Labor Relations Act nominally protects workers' rights, employers routinely use both legal and illegal means to prevent unionization. Labor laws should be reformed to require employers to remain truly neutral during a union organizing drive. In addition, penalties for unfair labor practices should be swift and severe.
- Ø Enforce Existing Wage and Hour Laws. A lack of enforcement is particularly a problem in such highly competitive industries as agriculture, janitorial services, and low-wage manufacturing, where there is extensive subcontracting of labor services. Allowing employers to pay workers less than the law requires impoverishes workers and undermines better employers trying to abide by the law.
- Ø Don't Use the Workplace to Enforce Immigration Laws. The current immigration laws are set up to sanction employers who hire undocumented immigrants, but it is the employees, both legal and undocumented, who end up paying the price. This policy should be replaced with one that allows all workers to pursue legal remedies regardless of immigration status. Special whistleblower protection should also be provided to all workers who report violations of labor laws.
- Ø Invest in Training and Education. Our increasing reliance on technology has made investment in training and education a crucial component in moving people out of the ranks of the poor. Existing training programs take a "work first" approach, placing people in low-paying, dead-end jobs that make them part of the working poor. Job training should be used to help people secure good jobs with career ladders, and should be targeted to those communities that need it the most. Creating training opportunities must go hand and hand with raising the wage floor, as seven of the ten fastest-growing occupations in Los Angeles pay less than $8.50 an hour.

Ø Expand Access to Housing. The housing situation in California is worse than in most of the country, and the cost of housing in Los Angeles has been rapidly escalating as the economy has improved. The federal government needs to fund more housing vouchers to allow low-income households to compete in the private rental market, and local governments need to ensure that developers pay for the true social costs of their projects by linking all new development to the creation of affordable housing.

Ø Expand Access to Health Insurance. Los Angeles has one of the lowest rates of employer-provided health insurance in the nation. The best response to this breach of the social contract would be for Congress to enact legislation guaranteeing health insurance to all Americans. Short of universal health care, ensuring the right to organize will go a long way toward expanding coverage since unions have been at the forefront of winning health care benefits for their members. In addition, the government can encourage employers to provide coverage by supporting purchasing pools that make insurance less expensive for small employers and living wage policies that require firms that benefit from government subsidies or contracts to provide health care coverage. Finally, the existing public health insurance programs must be expanded to cover more working poor adults.

L.A. County Jobs Surge Since '93, but Not Wages

■ Economy: Recovery has created 300,000 positions, but almost none are in middle-class range of $40,000 to $60,000.

By DON LEE
TIMES STAFF WRITER

Since the depths of the last recession, in the winter of 1993, more than 300,000 new jobs have been created in Los Angeles County. But a majority of these jobs pay substantially below-average wages—less than $25,000 a year—and barely one in 10 averages $60,000 or more, a Times analysis shows.

And perhaps most significantly, this recovery has yielded virtually no net jobs in industries that pay solid middle-class salaries, between $40,000 and $60,000.

The big picture that emerges from the analysis of state payroll records for all employers from 1991 to 1998 is that Los Angeles County's job base has been increasingly shifting toward the lower end.

Although not unique to Los Angeles, that trend has been more pronounced here because changes in the labor force and the industrial structure have been so dramatic. Economists say that this will only exacerbate income disparity.

"We're becoming more polarized," said Mark Drayse, research director at the nonprofit Economic Roundtable in Los Angeles.

It has long been apparent in this recovery that many high-paying jobs have vanished as defense-related cutbacks continued and banks and other Fortune 500 companies left or consolidated. In the process, premium jobs in entertainment, technology and international trade have been created by many smaller firms.

But the new data show sharp and lasting job losses in a surprisingly wide array of professional services and other industries that pay well.

For example, engineering and accounting services, where employees earn an average of $54,000 a year, have shed 26,000 jobs between 1991 and 1998. But most of the cuts have come since the county's recovery in 1994.

Those cutbacks aren't a shock to Cal Poly Pomona accounting professor John Karayan. With the spread of personal computers, he said, "You don't need as many white shirts summarizing data."

As Karayan also observes, some of those displaced professionals have moved into new jobs and are making even more money today as consultants and professional advisors. The stronger economy has

JOBs

Continued from A1 The sheer number of jobs created does not, of course, Los Angeles County has now recovered nearly three-fourths of the 425,000 jobs lost during the severe 1989-93 downturn.

Although a good year away from returning all the jobs lost, the county's payrolls have once again surpassed 4 million, and unemployment recently fell below 6%, for the first time in nine years. Job growth in the county has revived confidence in the results of residents, and beefed up retail and housing sales.

To be sure, some very good jobs have been created in recent years. Motion pictures, although slowing in the last year, added 33,000 workers between 1994 and 1995, and the industry's average annual wage per employee has risen from $15,000 to $14,000.

Two other high-paying industries have added significantly to their payrolls. But given by motion pictures and the booming stock market, which has produced employment and wage gains among a relatively small group of financial services firms, the average annual wage of all workers in the county jumped to $35,000 last year, from $30,000 in 1994. Adjusted for inflation, that is a real gain of almost 7%.

In Los Angeles County, despite its relatively high rate of home buying among immigrants, the historically low overall unemployment rate has improved only slightly since 1991. It has hovered in the 4%-5% range since the mid-1980s. That is slightly higher than the U.S. job-ownership rate back in 1990.

But most self-employed people do not make that much. And one consequence of low wages is that those workers are far more likely to be without health insurance. As previous research has shown, Los Angeles County's workers have the lowest rate of employer-provided health coverage among all major metropolitan areas.

And with more low-wage jobs, it is harder for workers to meet their living needs. Although more members of households in the county are working today, their combined incomes are still not enough for many to buy a home.

That helps explain why the rate of home ownership in Los Angeles County has barely budged, whereas it has surged in areas like Orange County to 63%, from 53% a decade ago. Nationwide, a record 57% of households now live in their own homes.

In Los Angeles County, despite exceeded $1.5 billion last year—half the entire amount paid in wages in the nearby quarter-million workers in Los Angeles County's restaurant industry, a veteran downturn.

It has hovered in the 4%-5% range since the mid-1980s. That is slightly higher than the U.S. job-ownership rate back in 1990.

Given that and related job-related trends, economists see the problem of income disparity increasing, particularly between the very top and the bottom. L.A. County's job data are less clear on whether the middle class is shrinking.

Between 1991 and 1998, the number of jobs paying between $25,000 and $40,000 showed a net increase of almost 100,000—more than half of that due to a flurry of teacher hiring by local schools, largely to meet the smaller-class-size mandate. As of last year, there were 1.6 million workers in that pay range, about the same as in 1991.

But some economists say that Los Angeles County, given its higher living costs, "middle class" might be more appropriately defined by jobs paying between $40,000 to $60,000. Viewed this way, the job picture is sobering: Since 1991, the total number of such jobs has fallen by 97,000, while jobs in the $15,000 to $25,000 range have risen by about that much, during the same period.

"This is a major issue in the region," said Mark A. Piana, executive director of the Southern California Assn. of Governments, a regional planning agency. But Piana says he is optimistic that this pattern can be reversed.

The county has a solid foundation means the $100-a-year aerospace job there is being replaced by a job in an auto or home supply store that pays $40,000 less.

Although the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate for the county dropped to 3.6% in May, joblessness has been running much higher in some of the gateway cities, including Compton, Lynwood and Bellflower. Those cities typify the regional polarization that has widened in this recovery, as the upscale Westside and the Burbank-Glendale area in the San Fernando Valley have boomed above others with cool (left) jobs in multimedia entertainment and finance.

Pushing this dichotomous growth trend, partially in Los Angeles County, is the growing availability of immigrant labor.

Although immigrants have been a major source of economic strength, especially in places like the San Gabriel Valley, their plenitude (in El Monte, Downey and other so-called gateway cities that make up a corridor along the southern part of the county) has led to a concern that the county will be unable to build on that region's history as a center for precision machining, to draw much needed high-tech firms. But Stites simply isn't available, he says.

"We're blemished, with huge old facilities where ceiling heights are too high and the inside is too shallow."

Some are starting to be redeveloped. But with city governments hungry for state tax dollars, these areas are often starved for resources. For instance, the 200-acre Northrop Grumman site in Foothill is being recycled for light

COMMENT 15.45

City of Los Angeles
200 N. Main Street, Room 607
Los Angeles, CA 90012
Attention: Michael Carey, City Clerk

Ted Fikre
EXECUTIVE VICE PRESIDENT AND GENERAL COUNSEL

Ladies and Gentlemen:

Enclosed please find the initial submission by L.A. Arena Company, J.J.C ("LAAC") in connection with the Arena Jobs Incentive Program established pursuant to Annex D of the Gap Funding Agreement between LAAC and the City of Los Angeles. The enclosed submission is for the Annual Review Date of March 31, 2000 and reflects jobs attributable to STAPLES Center since the opening of the building in October of 1999.

In summary, LAAC is claiming a total Jobs Incentive Credit of $1,991,637.50 for this initial period. As $1,500,000 has already been used in the form of the Credit Advance provided under the Gap Funding Agreement, the credit calculation reflected in the enclosed submission would yield a credit of $491,637.50 toward our Gap Funding obligation for the fiscal year ended June 30, 2000.

Please note that we anticipate an additional credit for the next Annual Review Date (March 31, 2001) because the job values in the current submission (a) do not include our security staff (as the security function was taken in-house shortly after the March 31, 2000 Annual Review Date), and (b) are based on a partial operating year (October - March) and should be materially greater for a complete year.

As evidenced by the voluminous nature of the enclosed submission, the information required by Annex D to the Gap Funding Agreement is quite extensive. We have expended a great deal of time and energy to compile the necessary data and to ensure its completeness and accuracy. If you have any questions or would like any clarifications regarding the data or the calculations set forth in this submission, we would welcome the opportunity to meet with you to discuss the information further.

Very truly yours,
